BRYAN BEGINS WILSON FIGHT

Letter Taken as Declaration of War on Pet Policies of the President by Former Secretary

Congratulates Sherwood Upon Speech Against Preparedness; Hints Campaign in Congress

Indicates Being in Communication with Leader Kitchin; Party Split Believed Near

Washington, Jan. 8.—William Jennings Bryan, former Secretary of State, today formally entered the fight in Congress against the administration's preparedness program and foreign policy.

In a letter to Representative Sherwood of Ohio, Mr. Bryan indicated that he is in communication with Democratic Leader Kitchin of the House in the preparedness fight, and said he was glad the foreign situation is being aired in Congress.

The letter congratulated the Ohio Representative upon a recent speech opposing the preparedness plans. As made public by Representative Sherwood the letter read:

> Allow me to congratulate you upon your speech. It hit the mark and was an excellent opening of the campaign which will, I hope, end in the defeat of the plan to increase the army and navy appropriations.
> I wish you would send a copy to the Commoner at once so that it can be inserted in this month's issue.
> I am glad to see them discussing the proposal to prevent Americans riding on belligerent ships. Have sent Kitchin a copy of an editorial which will appear in the Commoner on this subject.

CAUSES SENSATION.

The Bryan letter caused a sensation in Democratic legislative circles tonight. It was accepted as a flat declaration of war against the Wilson administration's pet projects.

The tone of the reference to Majority Leader Kitchin was taken as an indication that the Democratic House leader is co-operating, or at least is in correspondence with Mr. Bryan in the latter's efforts to defeat the preparedness program.

From this the political experts argued that President Wilson is face to face with a split in the Democratic party which cannot easily be patched.

One line in the Bryan letter bore out previous indications of the method to be followed in fighting the administration's foreign policy. This was the statement that the former Secretary of State was "glad to see them discussing the proposals to prevent Americans riding on belligerent ships."

Bills designed to prevent American citizens from traveling on ships entering the zone of danger in the European war have been introduced in Congress, and it has been understood they had the indorsement of Mr. Bryan.

In the House, Representative Stephens of Nebraska presented bills to accomplish this purpose and similar measures were introduced in the Senate by Senator Gore of Oklahoma.

LEADERS ARE MUM.

The proposal has been freely assailed in the Congressional debates on the foreign situation, which administration leaders have sought in vain to prevent. In the Senate, particularly, several Democrats have made it clear that they believe this government should at least warn its citizens to keep out of trouble by keeping off belligerent ships or ships carrying contraband which are liable to attack. Mr. Bryan's letter tonight made it clear that he is in complete sympathy with this proposition.

Administration leaders tonight declined to comment on the attitude of the in the Sherwood letter. former Secretary of State as set forth

Public Health, Public Morals and Public Righteousness Demand a Campaign Against the Drink and Drug Evils

TO THE PUBLISHER OF THE BOSTON AMERICAN:

I NOTE in a recent issue of the AMERICAN an advertisement of a whiskey masquerading as a medicine.

I wish all of our papers to reject all whiskey advertising of whatever kind and all advertising of any ardent liquors and all advertising of any medicinal preparations containing alcohol or opiates in habit-forming quantities.

Furthermore, I do not think that passive opposition to such great evils as the drink habit and the drug habit is sufficient for forces as powerful and as vital in the community as our newspapers.

I think our papers have more active duties and more positive responsibilities. I think they should campaign for a system of sumptuary laws:

FIRST—To prohibit the sale of injurious and habit-forming drugs except by the State and upon the prescriptions of regular physicians.

SECOND—To prevent the sale of alcoholic beverages except where the proportion of alcohol is fixed at some definite and acknowledgedly innocuous proportion.

THIRD—To make the taking or administering or prescribing of alcohol or opiates in habit-forming quantities a criminal offence, from the penalties of which regular physicians shall in no way be exempt.

The campaign against the drink evil and the drug evil is a matter of public health, of public morals and of public righteousness, which it is the duty of our papers actively and aggressively to promote.

NEW HAVEN JURY IS IN DEADLOCK

Hope for Verdict in Case of Railroad Directors Practically Given Up; Locked Up for Night

By International News Service.

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—Hope for a verdict in the New Haven directors' trial was practically abandoned by both sides after the jury had been out thirty-six hours. The indications were that the jurors were hopelessly deadlocked. The jury was locked up for the night at 11:30 o'colck.

Most of the millionaire defendants were on hand when court opened at 10 o'clock this morning. The others, with the exception of William Rockefeller, who is ill, arrived before 11 o'clock.

During the day various rumors were in the air as to how the jurors stood. The most persistent was that ten were holding out for acquittal of the eleven defendants.

The jury asked for more of the exhibits. Counsel for Rockefeller was mostly concerned over the jury's request for a letter in evidence written by the late James M. Hall when president of the New Haven, to Rockefeller. In it Hall asked that Rockefeller enlist the co-operation of Flagler to prevent the leasing of boats by the Florida & East Coast Railway Company to the Joy line. The evidence showed that Hall's appeal was not in vain. The Joy line never got any more boats from that source.

ARREST INVENTOR GARTLAND ACCUSES

Major D. Porter, an inventor, was arested last night by Lieutenant McDavitt of District-Attorney Pelletier's office on an indictment warrant charging the theft in thirteen counts of $3,224.44 from former State Senator John J. Gartland of Boston. The police alleged that Gartland had advanced Porter sums in connection with an invention of a non-refillable bottle.

AUTO HITS DALE AND $5,000 HORSE

Danvers, Jan. 8.—Frank A. Dale was severely injured this afternoon when a sleigh in which he was riding on Maple street was struck by an automobile owned and operated by E. H. Niles. A racing horse driven by Mr. Dale was badly cut. The animal is valued as $5,000. The sleigh was demolished.

WOMAN IS KILLED IN A JITNEY

Four Persons Injured in Collision with a Street Car Near Providence and Pawtucket Line

Providence, Jan. 8.—One woman was killed and four persons were injured, one seriously, in a collision between a jitney bus and an electric car near the Providence and Pawtucket line tonight.

THE DEAD.

SIMS, Mrs. Hesta, No. 226 Fountain street, Pawtucket.

THE INJURED.

KANE, Elizabeth, No. 151 High street, Pawtucket.

SIMS, Albert, husband of Mrs. Hesta.

SULLIVAN, Mrs. Elizabeth, No. 262 Fountain street, Pawtucket. Condition serious.

SULLIVAN, John S., husband of Mrs. Elizabeth.

The accident happened at the corner of North Main and Royal streets. The jitney bus, driven by Charles F. Quigley of Pine street, Providence, was making speed in an attempt to pass another automobile.

As it turned out into the car track it collided head on with an electric car. The front of the jitney bus was crumpled up and the front end of the electric car shattered. Many passengers in the car became frightened and several leaped out.

Bystanders and passengers in the car hauled the wreckage away and pulled the victims from the mass of twisted steel. The first one found was Mrs. Sims. She was still alive and was taken to the Memorial Hospital, but died shortly after her arrival.

Late tonight the doctors said they were doubtful as to Sullivan's recovery. He has probably a fractured skull and serious internal injuries.

The jitney was owned by Arthur Wemsch, No. 195 Keith street, Pawtucket.

MILLER IN COURT ON VERGE OF COLLAPSE

Fugitive Broker, Captured in Boston, Faces Providence Judge; Bail Fixed in Sum of $75,000

Many Losers Eager to Question Prisoner, but He Is Deaf to All; Police Now Have Mystery Letter

Albert P. Miller, Jr. the Providence broker whose alleged embezzlements are said to have robbed hundreds of victims of a round million of dollars, spent last night in the Providence city jail.

The fugitive from justice, who had been sought from Boston to New York, was arrested in his retreat in the Back Bay Hotel on Columbus avenue, this city, yesterday morning, waived extradition and was taken to Providence in the early afternoon.

He said that he was "broke" and admitted that "war stocks got me."

FALLS INTO STUPOR.

Miller was taken to the office of Chief Inspector William F. O'Neill in Providence at 3.15. He fell listlessly into a chair and sat there without speaking, almost without stirring, for five and one-half hours. A score of reporters, Attorney John Henshaw, who represents a number of investors whose funds were with Miller; Deputy Sheriff Herman Pastor, who had three civil writs of arrest for sums aggregating $80,000, and many others, plied Miller with questions all afternoon. To none did Miller reply. He gave no sign of hearing them. He appeared sick and dejected.

William C. and John C. Andrews of Providence, brothers of "Buzz" Andrews, the famous Brown football player, who are said to have lost more than a quarter of a million through Miller's defalcations, tried to engage him in conversation, but he replied to them only by a vacant stare.

Shortly before arraignment a frend of Miller's came in and the room was cleared. The friend brought him some food and coffee, as Miller had not eaten all day. On seeing him Miller rose to his feet and, leaning on his friend, gave way to tears. In a feeble and broken voice, he said "I certainly appreciate your friendiness to me in this extremity."

"Bert," said his friend, "have you anything you want to say to me?"

"I'm sick," he replied feebly. "I'm dazed. I can't sleep. I can't eat. I can't think. I don't know what those people were saying to me. I could hear voices but I could not understand.

"I held up until they told me my wife was sick. Then I lost my courage. I have not seen her for many days. When you see her tell her I am thinking of her. Go right away and telephone to her and tell her that I will keep thinking of her and it will bear me up."

Miller tried to eat but could not. He drank a little coffee and nibbled at a sandwich, but soon pushed the food from him.

"I have been like this since I went away. I cannot concentrate my faculties on any one thing—except my wife. I keep thinking of her, thinking of her. Tell her I keep thinking all the time of her," said Miller.

When the friend went to the telephone to carry out this mission it was answered by A. B. Miller, a son of the defaulter, who said that Mrs. Miller was still in bed and unable to rise, but he took her husband's message to her bedside. Mrs. Miller was prostrated several days ago and has not improved.

Miller was arraigned in a special session held in Chief O'Neill's office, first on the charge of embezzling $40,000 from Imogene S. Waldron of North Kingston, R. I., and then on a charge of embezzling $20,000 from the Ormsbee estate.

In a weak voice he pleaded not guilty to both charges. When asked if he waived examination he nodded in the affirmative, but his answer, if he made any, was inaudible. Bail was fixed at $60,000 on the first charge and $15,000 on the second.

Germany Agrees to Protect Lives of American Passengers on the Sea

Washington, Jan. 8.

The German note on the case of the American ship William P. Frye contained the following concessions to the contentions of the United States:

1 German naval forces will sink only such American vessels as are loaded with absolute contraband, when the preconditions provided by the declaration of London are present.

2 The German government quite shares the view of the American government that all possible care must be taken for the security of the crew and passengers of a vessel to be sunk.

3 Persons on a vessel may not be ordered into her lifeboats except when the weather, the condition of the sea and the neighborhood of the coasts afford absolute certainty that the boats will reach the nearest port.

U. S. NOTE PROTESTS ENGLAND'S MAIL BAN

Document Declared to be Forerunner of Ones on Blockade and Wide Contraband Lists

Illegal British Acts to Be Given Centre of Stage, State Department Official Asserts

Secretary Lansing at Work on Charges of Departures From Declaration of London

By the International News Service.

Washington, Jan. 8.—Believing that the submarine controversy with the Central Powers is nearing an end, the Washington government is preparing to turn its attention to Great Britain.

First evidence of this was seen today, when it was announced that the United States had sent a note to Great Britain vigorously protesting against interference with and censoring of mails between the United States and European countries.

The next step, it was stated authoritatively, will be the dispatch of a note directed to all the belligerents, but more particularly to Great Britain, protesting against what the United States regards as the illegal and unwarranted extension of contraband lists. A general attack on the British blockade is expected to follow. Secretary Lansing has the contraband note before him for completion.

Publication of Germanys last reply to the United States in the Frye case today, with important concessions made with reference to provisions for safety of passengers and crews of vessels to be sunk, created a highly favorable impression.

PERSIA TENSION LESS.

Taken in connection with the assurances given by the German government that its future Mediterranean submarine operations will be conducted in compliance with the conditions set forth by the United States, it encouraged officials in the belief that Germany will go to the utmost limit in clearing up the latest submarine crisis precipitated by the sinking of the Persia. Austria previously had given these assurances.

State Department officials were unable to announce today what the next step in the submarine controversy will be. The Persia case first must be cleared up.

Inability of American consular officers in taking affidavits of Persia survivors to obtain legal facts fixing responsibility for the vessel's loss has placed the United States in a position where it must rely on Germany and Austria for this information.

In its communication to the United States yesterday the German government promised to conduct an official investigation of the Persia case. The Austrian government is conducting such an investigation.

Colonel House Confers With Sir Edward Grey; Goes to Berlin Next

Impression Grows Wilson Agent's Mission Is to Aid in Restoring Peace.

By International News Service.

London, Jan. 8.

AS the first step in his trip of investigation into war conditions in Europe, Colonel E. M. House, personal representative of President Wilson, saw Sir Edward Grey, the British Minister for Foreign Affairs, today. He spent some time with the Foreign Office head.

No statement was given out regarding the matters discussed. Officials of the government displayed anxiety that nothing be said that would indicate Colonel House's call should be termed a conference between the two men.

Colonel House left his hotel without leaving any word as to his destination, and it is expected he will spend the week-end with a party which will number among its members several close advisers of the British government.

Since Colonel House's arrival in Europe, the impression has grown that his mission deals with efforts of the United States to restore peace.

Colonel House is known to be awaiting advices from Ambassador Gerard before definitely planning a trip to Berlin. In the meantime, the next two weeks will be spent in England.

BIG LOSSES IN RUSSIAN OFFENSIVE

Bayonet the Major Weapon in Stubborn Clashes with Austrians From Riga to Bukowina

By International News Service.

London, Jan. 8.—The great battle, or series of battles, on the Russian front, is being fought with a desperation and recklessness that must soon result in a decision or cease from exhaustion and losses.

The outstanding feature of the fighting is that from Riga to Bukowina the hundreds of thousands of men engaged are in a hand-to-hand grapple. Artillery plays the minor part; the bayonet is the major weapon.

Neither side claims victory, but both the Austrian and Russian official reports use the phrase "enormous losses."

The Russians have resumed their massed attacks on the Austrian lines in Eastern Galicia and in Bukowina, in some places they succeeded in penetrating the Austrian positions, only to be ultimately ejected.

The Russian official report, received tonight from Petrograd, says:

"In the Riga region, near the Mitau road, the Germans again directed poisonous gases against our trenches.

"Considerable German forces, by counter attacks, repulsed our detachments from Czartorysk but afterwards were dislodged, leaving three officers and fifty men in our hands. Further attempts by the Germans to drive us from Czartorysk failed.

"On the middle Strypa our troops captured Austrian positions here and there and fortified themselves behind wire entanglements in close contact with the Austrians.

"In this fighting we captured seventeen officers and more than 1,000 men, together with several machine guns.

SHIP HITS MINE; 200 PERISH

Steamer Strikes Mine Near San Giovanni Di Medua, on the Albanian Coast, and Goes Down

Paris, Jan. 8.—Two hundred passengers perished when an Italian steamer was sunk by a mine Thursday near San Giovanni Di Medua, on the Albanian coast. On board were 425 Montenegrin recruits from the United States.

The vessel, laden with a large quantity of foodstuffs, was bound from Brindisi, on the Italian coast, across the Adriatic, when it struck a mine just off the port of Medua and quickly went to the bottom.

News of the disaster was given out officially by the Montenegrin consulate late last night.

According to dispatches from Athens great anxiety is felt there over the fate of nine ships laden with grain recently purchased in America. None of the nine vessels has either been signalled or reported arrived in port.

San Giovanna Di Medua, situated in the Gulf of Drin, about sixteen miles south of Scutari, has been the favorite landing place of steam and sail craft running food and ammunition across the Adriatic from the Italian coast.

Latest Note from Berlin Bows to the Original American Humanity Contention on Submarines

Concessions Remove All Scruples of Congressmen About Discussion of International Issues

President Refuses to Amplify the Charges in His Annual Address Against "Naturalized Citizens"

By the International News Service.

Washington, Jan. 8.—Germany subscribes to the position of the United States that a lifeboat in an open sea is a "place of safety only under certain conditions—in its last note to this government on the Frye case, made public today.

Germany states in this note that hereafter persons aboard a merchant vessel about to be sunk will not be forced to take to lifeboats, except when the general conditions are such that they are certain to reach land.

The German government quite shares the view of the American government that all possible care must be taken for the security of the crew and passengers of a vessel to be sunk.

Consequently the persons found on board of a vessel may not be ordered into lifeboats except when the general conditions, that is to say, the weather, the condition of the sea and the neighborhood of the coast affords absolute certainty that the boat will reach the nearest port.

The administration today abandoned its efforts to halt discussion of the foreign situation which has developed in both Houses of Congress.

SCRUPLES REMOVED.

The announcement that the Lusitania controversy with Germany was practically settled and the optimistic outlook in the Persia incident relieved both the White House and the talkers at the capital from any scruples that they may have had. For both House members were prepared to accept the whole range of international issue, the submarine controversy, the question of keeping Americans off ships in the war zone, and the proposal to embargo arms and ammunitions bound for the allies.

In the Senate supporters of the embargo proposal and the proposal to keep Americans at home prepared for a vigorous aggressive fight to put those measures into effect.

In the House the Judiciary Committee received a communition from President Wilson declining to amplify his charges made in his annual address against naturalized citizens.

BAYONET FOR OHIO STRIKERS

Militia Is Rushed to Struthers, Across River from East Youngstown, to Face a New Outbreak

Mayor and 200 Armed Citizens Organize to Assist in Defending Suburb From Further Trouble

By International News Service.

Youngstown, O., Jan. 8.—Two companies of militia were rushed to Struthers, a village across the river from East Youngstown, to which the rioting following the clash between the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Company strikers and guards spread for a brief time this afternoon.

Led by Mayor Stough, 200 citizens of Struthers organized and armed themselves to meet the rioters.

A further threatened attempt of strikers of the Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company to attack the plant this afternoon was quelled when Colonel Zimmerman, commanding the Fifth Ohio Regiment, ordered details of two companies into action.

Patrol lines were drawn and the strikers were driven back at the point of the bayonet to their position on the hill overlooking East Youngstown.

Following the uncovering of an alleged plot on the part of strike sympathizers to dynamite the power plant of the Republic Iron & Steel Company, at Hazleton, Brigadier-General Speaks this afternoon ordered a strong guard of militiamen to the plant.

MILITIA IN CHARGE.

While the city is not under martial law, Brigadier-General Speaks, in charge of the guardsmen, virtually is in charge of the town's affairs. Saloons have been closed here and in the rest of the county. The guardsmen have formed a ring of steel around the wrecked section of the city and the sheet and tube company plant.

Efforts this afternoon to bring about a settlement of the strike of 3,000 men at the Republic Iron & Steel Company and the sheet and tube plants failed. The officials of the two companies declined to discuss the riots or the strike. State Mediator Croxton arrived today and will try to bring about peace.

Efforts were begun to place the blame for the riot early last evening which started the mob on its orgy of destruction. A formal investigation by local authorities will result.

While the death list of one was not increased, it was learned that more than 100 persons were injured. There are more than twenty persons in the hospitals, four of whom are expected to die. Reports in Youngstown and neighboring villages showed that fully eighty other persons were either shot or wounded with knives.

It was declared tonight that as soon as the militia has re-established order the Republic and the Sheet & Tube plants will be placed in operation again.

More than one hundred rioters are under arrest and a loss, estimated by the police of $1,000,000 was caused in a fire-swept area of half a mile square.

The city was put under control of the national guard, with its armed members instructed to shoot to kill if the disorder was not effectively checked.

East Youngstown was infested with drink-crazed mobs without leaders, but each with a determination to do all the damage possible.

The rioting broke out in an East Youngstown saloon. It was looted and the torch applied. The liquor confiscated by the mob was distributed and under its influence the rioters marched from place to place applying the torch and looting.

Within an hour a half mile area was a sea of flames. Firemen from Youngstown were called, but were held back by the mob.

GUARDS AT PLANT.

The rioters continued their work and everytime there was any indication the fire might die down the torch was again applied.

The plant of the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Company resembled a penitentiary. Two of the Cleveland companies of the Fifth Regiment were ordered inside the big plant's stockade to help the 100 men who, armed with repeating rifles, had guarded the company's property through the night of terror.

There was fear that some of these guards, unnerved by loss of sleep, might unintentionally commit an act that would cause fresh and more serious outbreaks. General Speaks, in charge of the National Guard, decided it would be safer to put the plant under State guard than to leave it to the company's own police.

Inside the plant about 300 office employes, many of them girl clerks and stenographers, were marooned. They couldn't get to their homes.

Some of the more daring of the clerks agreed to get food. They left the plant and one by one returned with what supplies they had been able to get. Stenographers rolled up their sleeves and became cooks, clerks, waiters, and even clerical department heads did what they could do to get the meal ready and serve it. There was not a great deal for the 300 to eat, but what there was was divided as evenly as possible and all seemed satisfied.

Troops will be asked to get sufficient supplies of food and bedding in the plant to make it more comfortable during the remainder of the enforced imprisonment of the office force.

Among the buildings destroyed were Hamory's private bank, the East Youngstown Postoffice, twelve saloons and scores of business houses. The number of buildings razed is above fifty.

police, fell into Inspector O'Neill's hands tonight. Following is the letter:

> Dearie—Did not receive your letters until today and we were mighty glad to get them, because we were feeling anxious.
> Everything came out in the papers and you have got to be very quiet for the next few days. Arrange for your meals in your room, if possible; pretend you are sick if necessary but be sure you have meals, real meals, served you, none of this crackers and sardines stuff, because your health is of the first importance to us.
> I will try to get down either Saturday night or Sunday, but I will have to be very careful. I would come down sooner, but don't think it would be safe. Take no chances.
> Good-by. God bless you and watch over you.
> P. S.—Be thinking about Kennedy's nerves.

Inspector O'Neill believes the postscript, "Be thinking about Kennedy's nerves," is a secret code, containing a message to Miller which would prove unreadable in case the letter fell into the hands of the police.

The way in which Miller was found and arrested, after a week's retreat in this city, the preparations of the complainants to have him held without bail, and the tender greeting of the son all formed a chain of circumstances as dramatic as the events leading to the search for Miller himself.

Miller's alleged peculations have brought loss, it is said by the Providence police, to many of his personal friends and his associates in church and society circles of Providence.

A few years ago he became a member of St. Stephen's Church in Providence and wore the gold cross of his office on his watch charm with evident pride. Communicants of St. Stephen's are now said to be listed among the complainants.

Widows and orphans are also among those who are said by the police to have lost their property in Miller's wild speculations in war stocks.

It is an ironic case, if the police allegations be correct, of the so-called "war babies," or war stocks, causing loss to real babies, or at least young people, in the eyes of the law, are infants.

GAVE BOSTON CLEW.

The Providence police sent photographs of Miller broadcast. Chief Inspector William F. O'Neil of that city said he thought Miller had gone to New York. This may have been a blind, to make Miller relax caution, for O'Neil tipped the Boston police that he was sure Miller was somewhere in this city.

O'Neil was right. Miller had been in Boston since last Monday, when he dropped off a Shore Line express at the Back Bay station.

Hardly twenty paces from the rear entrance to the Back Bay station is a rear door of the Back Bay Hotel, which fronts on Columbus avenue. It was the quickest cover a man could get under the circumstances.

ADA REHAN, ACTRESS, IS DEAD

Fails to Rally After Operation in Roosevelt Hospital; Made Debut in 1874 at the Age of 14

By International News Service.

New York, Jan. 8.—Ada Rehan, the actress, died in Roosevelt Hospital at 1 o'clock this afternoon.

She was taken to the hospital December 31. Several days later she underwent a serious operation. She never recovered from the effects of it.

Ten years' absence from the stage have not obliterated the memory of the time when Ada Rehan was the favorite at Daly's Theatre, with the power to draw all New York. The public is proverbially forgetful, but not of the actress who charmed in a twenty-years' career in New York city.

SISTERS ACTRESSES.

In that period she played roles with Augustin Daly's stock company in more than 300 plays. This amazing repertoire ran the gamut of dramatic possibilities, tragedy, farce and the classical. In her every part Miss Rehan excelled.

How she came by her name is not the least interesting part of her story. She was born in Limerick, Ireland, on April 22, 1860, her family name being Crehan. Her parents brought her to America when she was five, taking up their residence in Brooklyn.

There she spent her childhood and was educated. The stage was an almost inevitable career, with her two sisters, Mrs. Oliver Byron and Nettie Russell, already on the boards. So in 1874, when Ada was fourteen, she seized the opportunity to make her debut as Clara Oliver Doud Byron in "Across the Continent," at Newark.

A typographical error made her name appear on the playbill at her first performance as Ada C. Rehan. She adopted the mistake as her stage name, and Ada C. Rehan she remained.

JUDGE GARY TO STICK TO STEEL

New York, Jan. 8.—Judge Elbert H. Gary tonight set at rest the rumor that he is to retire as chairman of the board of directors of the U. S. Steel Corporation.

A report said Judge Gary had clashed with Henry C. Frick.

There were also rumors in Wall Street that Judge Gary "was being groomed for very high political honor."

When the attention of Judge Gary was called tonight to the rumors, he dictated the following reply:

"There is no foundation for the statement, or for any part of it."

He was asked regarding the rumor of a political honor to be conferred upon him. He smiled as he answered: "I have no political aspirations."

BRENNAN REPLIES TO CRITICS' ATTACK

Former Senator James H. Brennan of Charlestown yesterday replied to the attack of the three hostile members of the Suffolk County Apportionment Commission, following his election as chairman of the board. Brennan alluded to his critics as "jitney Democrats." The members of the commission who charged him with tricking them by soliciting the votes of the four Republicans are Callahan, Brophy and Collins.

Boston Shivers in Cold Wave; Warm Today

Boston shivered yesterday in its first touch of real Wintry weather. It was the coldest day of the season, the thermometer at the top of the Federal building registering 8 above for the low mark of the day and season to date.

The official forecast promises a rising temperature with fair weather today and tomorrow, with variable winds becoming southerly in the next thirty-six hours.

AGED MOTHER OF ERICH MUENTER DIES IN CHICAGO

Former Cambridge Man's Suicide and Shooting of Morgan Kept from Parent.

Chicago, Jan. 8.—Mrs. Julia C. Muenter, mother of Erich Muenter, alias Frank Holt, the man who placed the bomb in the national Capitol, shot J. Pierpont Morgan and who was suspected of murdering his wife, while he was a Harvard instructor in Cambridge, is dead in this city. She was 81 years old.

Mrs. Muenter had been ill for many months and died in ignorance of her son's crimes. The death notices did not mention Erich in the list of her children. When Muenter's career, which resulted in his suicide, was before the public, the newspapers were kept from Mrs. Muenter.

On July 2, 1915, a bomb attached to a door in one of the inside passages at the Capitol was exploded, blowing down the door and destroying a portion of the wall. The authorities received a letter signed "Frank Holt," in which the writer claimed he was responsible.

The next day, a man forced his way into the country home of J. Pierpont Morgan, and before several members of the household, shot twice at Morgan and wounded him.

The man was arrested and taken to jail, where he gave the name of Frank Holt and confessed that he was the man who placed the bomb in the Capitol. Three days later he died, and the jail authorities gave out a statement that he committed suicide in his cell.

Reporters were struck by the similarity of Holt to Erich Muenter, a former Harvard instructor, who was wanted, charged with the murder of his wife in Cambridge. Holt was identified as the former Cambridge man.

The death of the younger Mrs. Muenter occurred in a house on Oxford street, Cambridge, on April 16, 1906. The authorities claimed she came to her death from poison administered in beef tea by her husband. Mrs. Muenter had just given birth to a child. Muenter escaped the police by a few minutes, and although he was trailed by newspapermen, they lost him in New Orleans.

After the bomb outrage, the police traced his career after he left Cambridge and found that he held several responsible positions.

REPORTS RUSSIAN DEFEAT IN PERSIA

Berlin, Jan. 8 (by wireless to Sayville)—"According to private reports from Constantinople," says the Overseas News Agency, "the Russians attacked a town in the Persian province of Azerbaijan (northwestern Persia), which was defended by Turks and volunteers. The Russians were defeated and driven to the 'rumiah district, suffering heavy losses.

GRAHAME-WHITE DESERTED HER, WIFE CHARGES

Former Dorothy Taylor, Seeking Divorce, Says Aviator Is No Longer Military Flier.

By International News Service.

London, Jan. 8.—"It is a very painful subject and the less said about it the better," said Mrs. Claude Grahame-White today, discussing the matrimonial suit she has just filed against her husband, the noted aviator. Mrs. Grahame-White was Miss Dorothy Taylor of New York. Her suit asks restitution of her conjugal rights, and is the usual preliminary in England an action for divorce.

Mrs. White, who looks like a mere girl, is staying at Claridge's Hotel with friends. She told her plans to a correspondent of the International News Service.

"Although my suit against Mr. Grahame-White is a restitution action," she said, "I intend later to ask for a divorce.

"Had Mr. Grahame-White remained in the army I should not have sued him during the war, but as he has left the flying corps and is no longer connected with the army, there is no reason why I should wait."

Mrs. Grahame-White makes it clear that she wants a divorce. "In America," she said, "it wouldn't be necessary to bring the restitution suit before proceeding with the main action."

WHAT ORDER MEANS.

The suit for restitution of conjugal rights, if granted by the court, will require Grahame-White to rejoin his wife within a specified time, usually fourteen days. If he fails to obey the order the way is cleared for a divorce action.

The matrimonial affairs of the Grahame-Whites have long been the subject of gossip, even before the war.

The disagreements between them are said to have started when Hendon was London's fashionable rendezvous. Grahame-White was always the outstanding attraction at the famous flying grounds and was the idol of society beauties.

Mayfair leaders and stage favorites flocked to the aerodrome and vied with each other for the privilege of flying with the popular aviator. His private office was a daily place of call for the fair sex, and it is not too much to say that many had their heads turned by infatuation.

FAVORITE OF LADIES.

Women in automobiles left flowers and cigarettes at the aviator's office and he took advantage of the shining hours to pile up big fees for passenger flights.

With all this attention society freely said that it was not surprising that Mrs. Grahame-White should become jealous and object to her husband's associations outside the domestic circle.

Just before the war the domestic affairs of the Grahame-Whites reached a critical stage. Mrs. Grahame-White went to America. The aviator was often seen in company with a woman named Ethel Levy.

Mrs. Grahame-White returned with her father and decided to seek legal advice. She consulted the famous King's counsel, F. E. Smith, the present Attorney-General.

There was some talk of a separation and the preliminaries are said to have reached an advanced stage. While these negotiations were proceeding the war started and Grahame-White entered the government aviation service.

LIVED APART.

Their domestic relations apparently remained unimproved and the couple maintained separate establishments, the aviator living in a St. James street apartment, while Mrs. Grahame-White had a suite in a hotel on fashionable Jermyn street and later resided for some time at the Ritz and Claridge's hotels.

Mrs. Grahame-White then is said to have decided to take action. To her formal requests that her husband return to her he is said to have written, declining. These letters will be produced before the court in the restitution suit, which alleges systematic desertion.

Mrs. Grahame-White herself today refused to disclose the reasons for the disagreement between them.

How to Save Your Eyes

Try this Free Prescription.

Do your eyes give you trouble? Do you already wear eyeglasses or spectacles? Thousands of people wear these "windows" who might easily dispense with them. You may be one of these, and it is your duty to save your eyes before it is too late. The eyes are neglected more than any other organ of the entire body. After you finish your day's work you sit down and rest your muscles, but how about your eyes? Do you rest them? You know you do not. You read or do something else that keeps your eyes busy; you work your eyes until you go to bed. That is why so many have strained eyes and finally other eye troubles that threaten partial or total blindness. Eyeglasses are merely crutches; they never cure. This free prescription, which has benefited the eyes of so many, may work equal wonders for you. Use it a short time. Would you like your eye troubles to disappear as if by magic? Try this prescription. Go to the nearest wideawake drug store and get a bottle of Optona tablets; fill a two-ounce bottle with warm water, drop in one tablet and allow it to thoroughly dissolve. With this liquid bathe the eyes two to four times daily. Just note how quickly your eyes clear up and how soon the inflammation will disappear. Don't be afraid to use it; it is absolutely harmless. Many who are now blind might have saved their eyes had they started to care for them in time. This is a simple treatment, but marvelously effective in multitudes of cases. Now that you have been warned don't delay a day, but do what you can to save your eyes and you are likely to thank us as long as you live for publishing this prescription.

BERLIN IN FRYE NOTE YIELDS AGAIN TO U. S.

Agrees to Allow Amount of Damage to Be Fixed by Experts Named by Both Governments.

Ambassador Gerard to the Secretary of State:

American Embassy,
Berlin, Dec. 2, 1915.

Sir—With reference to my telegram of even date and to previous correspondence on the subject of the claim for damages for the sinking of the American merchantman Wm. P. Frye, I have the honor to transmit to you herewith a copy and translation of a note received from the Imperial Foreign Office, dated November 29, 1915, which replies to a note which I addressed to the Imperial Foreign Office on October 14, 1915, pursuant to the instructions contained in your telegram number 2891, of October 12, 1915.

A copy and translation of the draft of a compromise submitted by the Imperial German government is likewise transmitted herewith.

I have, etc.
(Signed) GERARD.

THE GERMAN NOTE.

"The German Minister for Foreign Affairs to Ambassador Gerard.

"Berlin, Nov. 29, 1915.

"The undersigned has the honor to inform his excellency, Mr. James W. Gerard, Ambassador of the United States of America, in reply to the note of October 14, F. O. No. 5671, relative to indemnity for the sinking of the American merchant vessel William P. Frye, as well as to the settlement by arbitration of the difference of opinion which has arisen on this occasion, as follows:

"With regard first to the ascertainment of indemnity for the vessel sunk, the German government is in agreement with the American government in principle that the amount of damages be fixed by two experts, one each to be named by the German and American governments. The German government regrets that it cannot comply with the wish of the American government to have the experts meet in Washington, since the expert nominated by it, Dr. Greve, of Bremen, director of the North German Lloyd, is unable to get away from here, and furthermore would be exposed to the danger of capture during a voyage to America in consequence of the conduct of maritime war by England contrary to international law.

SHARES AMERICAN VIEW.

"Should the American expert likewise be unable to get away, the two experts might perhaps get in touch with each other by correspondence.

"The German government likewise regrets that it cannot assent at this time to the nomination of an umpire as desired by the American government, for apart from the fact that in all probability the experts will reach an agreement in the case of the William P. Frye with the same facility as was the case with similar negotiations with other neutral governments, the assent of the German government to the consultation of an umpire would depend materially upon whether the difference of opinion between the two experts pertained to questions of principle or merely to the appraisement of certain articles.

"The consultation of an umpire could only be considered at all in the case of appraisements of this nature.

ONE ALTERNATIVE.

"Should the American government insist on its demands for the meeting of the experts at Washington or the early choice of an umpire, the only alternative would be to arrange the fixing of damages by diplomatic negotiation. In such an event the German government begs to await the transmission of a statement of particulars of the various claims for damages accompanied by the necessary proofs.

"With regard to the arbitral treatment of the difference of opinion relative to the interpretation of certain stipulations of the Prussian-American commercial treaties, the German government has drawn up the inclosed draft of a compromise which would have to be worded in the German and English languages and drawn up with due consideration of the two alternating texts.

"It is true that the draft does not accommodate the suggestions of the American government so far as it is in accordance with the rules of summary procedure, provided by Chapter 4 of The Hague arbitration convention, but with the rules of regular procedure. The summary procedure is naturally intended only for differences of opinion of inferior importance, whereas the German government attaches very particular importance to the interpretation of the Prussian-American treaties, which have existed for over 100 years.

"Pursuant to the agreement made any proposed amendments would have to be discussed between the foreign office and the American embassy, and oral discussions would appear to be advisable.

"Until the decision of the permanent court of arbitration, the German naval forces will sink only such American vessels as are loaded with absolute contraband, when the preconditions provided by the declaration of London are present.

"In this the German government quite shares the view of the American government that all possible care must be taken for the security of the crew and passengers of a vessel to be sunk. Consequently the persons found on board of a vessel may not be ordered into her lifeboats except when the general conditions, that is to say, the weather, the condition of the sea and the neighborhood of the coasts, afford absolute certainty that the boats will reach the nearest port.

"For the rest the German government begs to point out that in cases where German naval forces have sunk neutral vessels for carrying contraband no loss of life has yet occurred.

"The undersigned begs to give expression to the hope that it will be possible for the two governments to reach a complete understanding regarding the case of the William P. Frye on the above basis, and avails himself of this opportunity to renew to his excellency, the ambassador, the assurance of his highest consideration.

(Signed) "VON JAGOW."

Text of German Compromise to Settle Frye Case with the U. S.

Washington, Jan. 8.

FOLLOWING is the complete text of the compromise agreement suggested by Germany to settle the controversy over the sinking of the American ship William P. Frye, and submitted to the State Department today by Ambassador Gerard at Berlin:

The imperial government and the government of the United States of America having reached an agreement to submit to a court of arbitration the difference of opinion which has arisen, occasioned by the sinking of the American merchant vessel William P. Frye by a German warship, in respect of the interpretation of certain stipulations of the Prussian-American treaties of amity and commerce, the undersigned, duly authorized for this purpose, have agreed to the following compromise:

ARTICLE I.

A court of arbitration, composed in accordance with the following stipulations, is charged with the decision of the legal question:

Whether, according to the treaties existing between the parties, in particular Article XIII., of the Prussian-American treaty of amity and commerce of July 11, 1799, the belligerent contracting party is preventing from sinking merchant vessels of the neutral contracting party for carrying contraband when such sinking is permissible according to general principles of international law.

ARTICLE II.

The court of arbitration shall be composed of five arbitrators, to be chosen from among the members of the permanent tribunal of arbitration at The Hague.

Each government will choose two arbitrators, of whom only one may be a national of such country, as soon as possible, at the latest within two weeks from the day this compromise is signed. The four arbitrators thus nominated shall choose an umpire within four weeks after they have been notified of their nomination: in case of an equal vote the president of the Swiss Federal Council shall be requested to select the umpire.

ARTICLE III.

On March 1, 1916, each party shall transmit to the bureau of the permanent tribunal of arbitration eighteen copies of its argument with authenticated copies of all documents and correspondence on which it intends to rely in the case. The bureau will arrange without delay for the transmission to the arbitrators and to the parties, each arbitrator to receive two copies, each party three copies. Two copies shall remain in the archives of the bureau.

On May 1, 1916, the parties shall deposit their counter cases with the supporting evidence and their statements in conclusion.

ARTICLE IV.

Each party shall deposit with the international bureau, at the latest on March 1, 1916, the sum of three thousand gulden of the Netherlands toward the costs of the arbitral procedure.

ARTICLE V.

The court of arbitration shall meet at The Hague on June 15, 1916, and proceed immediately to examine the dispute.

ARTICLE VI.

The parties may make use of the German or the English language. The members of the court may use the German or the English language as they may choose. The decisions of the court shall be written in both languages.

ARTICLE VII.

Each party shall be represented by a special agent, whose duty shall be to act as an intermediary between the party and the court.

These agents shall furnish the court any explanations which the court may demand of them; they may submit any legal arguments which they may consider advisable for the defence of their case.

ARTICLE VIII.

The stipulations of the convention of Oct. 18, 1907, for the pacific settlement of international disputes, shall be applied to this arbitral procedure, insofar as nothing to the contrary is provided by the above compromise.

ARTILLERY WINS FOR THE FRENCH

Report Success in Bombarding German Works Along Front.

By International News Service.

Paris, Jan. 8.—The War Office at midnight issued the following statement of operations for the day:

"Our artillery today bombarded, with good effect, the German works at various points of the front. South of Arras an armored cupola was destroyed. North of the Aisne we damaged the German trenches near Berry-au-Bac and on Hill 108. In the latter region our fire caused two heavy explosions. East of St. Mihiel we demolished two blockhouses.

At Hartmann's weilerkopf last night the Germans, after a violent bombardment, attacked our positions between the Rhefelsen and Hirzstein peaks. They were only able to gain a footing in a small section of a trench, from which they were driven this morning by a counter-attack. Some prisoners and a machine gun fell into our hands.

"Army of the East—There is no change of our front here.

Our heavy artillery has bombarded the Turkish batteries on the Asiatic shore. An infantry attack upon our trenhes was easily repulsed."

French Destroy Chataillon Mills

By International News Service.

Paris, Jan. 8.—The following communique was issued by the French War Office today:

"The night was relatively calm north of the Aisne, our artillery destroyed the Chatillon mills, to the east of Fontenoy, which had been defensively organized by the enemy."

U. S. NOTE PROTESTS AGAINST BRITISH BAN

ment declared today that the State Department will wait a reasonable tune for Germany and Austria to obtain information from submarine commanders in the Mediterranean before acting. What action will then be taken is a matter of policy yet to be determined. Such action will be designed, however, officials said, to reach an understanding with all the Teutonic allies that will bring an end to all illegal submarine warfare.

GERMAN ASSURANCES.

The assurance given by Germany in the communication submitted to Secretary Lansing by Count Von Bernstorff yesterday, and the concessions made in the Frye notes, when taken together, show full compliance with the demands of the United States respecting submarine warfare.

In the first communication assurances were given that:

German submarines will not destroy passenger or freight merchant vessels in the Mediterranean, unless they try to escape or offer resistance, without first according safety to passengers and crews.

In the Frye note Germany defined the measure of safety that would be accorded in these terms:

"The German government quite shares the view of the United States. Persons found on board of a vessel may not be ordered into her lifeboats except when the general condition, that is to say, the weather, condition of the sea and the neighborhood of the coasts afford absolute certainty that the boats will reach the nearest port."

Rejection of the suggestion of the United States that the two experts to fix the amount of indemnity to be paid for the Frye sinking meet in the United States, and that an umpire be named to settle any dispute that may arise between the experts, is not expected to raise an issue. The United States regards the Frye negotiations as favorably concluded.

PROTEST ON MAILS.

That President Wilson and Secretary Lansing consider the submarine question in a fair way to solution was made known with the announcement that the first of the protests to the British government—that concerning mail seizures—had already gone forward and would be made public early next week.

This note takes up four points, detention and censoring of mails to the United States from belligerent countries, to the United States from neutral countries, from the United States to belligerent countries and from the United States to neutrals.

The United States is said to take the position that the British blockade, under which the mail seizures was justified, is in itself illegal and that, moreover, stoppage of these mails cannot be justified on grounds of military necessity.

The contraband note, which was placed before Secretary Lansing in the form of a bulky memorandum, outlining all the departures made by Great Britain and other belligerents from the contraband agreements set forth by the Declaration of London, is awaiting final drafting at the hands of Secretary Lansing.

"Great Britain is about to take the centre of the stage," a high official of the State Department said today.

"The United States may be expected to take definite action soon on the protests against illegal British acts, which have been piling up in the State Department during the submarine negotiations."

DEATH THREAT FOR WIRELESS OPERATOR

By International News Service.

New York, Jan. 8.—Further details of the frightful voyage of the disabled Greek liner Thessaloniki were received here today with the arrival of the Anchor liner Perugia, bearing ninety members of the crew.

"On the night of the second gale the captain and officers of the ship came to the wireless room" said Chief Wireless Operator Vranicas. "The chief officer ordered me to send a message for help, saying the ship was in danger of sinking. The captain told me not to send it. The first officer persisted, saying 'you must send it and I speak in behalf of the passengers on board.'

"The captain put his hand to his hip packet, declaring he would shoot me if I laid my figer on the key. The captain left the wirless room and I sent the message while he was away.

ZEPPELIN CAUGHT IN GALE DESTROYED

By International News Service.

DECLARES U. S. CANNOT REMAIN ALOOF IN WAR

Dr. Butler Finds America Is Vitally Interested in the Struggle of Ideals.

The European war is a world contest of ideals from which it is impossible for this country to remain aloof in any real sense, according to President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University, who delivered an address last night before the Beacon Society of Boston, at their dinner in the Algonquin Club.

"I feel certain," declared Dr. Butler, "that our lot has been cast in the midst of one of the great historic movements in the history of civilization.

"At bottom the war which is now raging in Europe is a conflict of two deep-seated ideals—the ideal of world dominion by one nation for the benefit and welfare of mankind, and the ideal of independent, interdependent, separate co-equal nationalities, developing side by side after the fashion which has underlain the last 800 years of world history.

TWO COURSES OPEN.

"Either there must eventually be a conquest of the spirit of world dominion which will proceed in Napoleonic terms to work itself out in actual practice, or else the attempt will be definitely checked and the separate developments of nations carried on to further heights.

"This nation has been a party to the European war since the day it broke out. The idea that we can stand aside, aloof from the conflict, is absurd, for participants we are, in the closest, most intimate and most definite ways, although not, of course, in the military sense. Everything bears witness to the part which we have played in this world war and for this reason we are deeply interested in its outcome.

"In the strictly military sense we may be neutral, but we cannot remain indifferent to the issues at stake, issues which will surely be settled in Boston, New York, Chicago and San Francisco, as well as on the bloody battlefields of Europe.

"We are very deeply concerned as to whether this war shall issue in terms of world dominion or in terms of separate, independent and interdependent nationalities, because, in accordance with this, the whole fabric of the future will be built, whether of one or of many stones.

"If it be built of one stone, that stone will be force and we, who have always believed in the supremacy of law, can never rule the world by force. If our traditions and our ideals are to be of influence in the world of the future, they must be so in terms of independent, interdependent nationalities, and it is therefore to our interest to see that this form of civilization prevails, having for its basis the principal of federation and of the supreme power of the judicial court.

McCALL A GUEST.

"Napoleon failed in his dream of world dominion, but he failed because he tried to turn back the hands of time on the face of the clock of progress and endeavored to treat a nationalized world as Caesar might have done."

Governor McCall was a guest of the society, his entrance to the dining room being the signal for an outburst of applause.

Louis A. Coolidge, president of the society, acted as toastmaster, and Henry F. Hurlburt gave a tribute of appreciation for Dr. Butler's address. Others at the head table were ex-Governor Foss, George H. Lyman, William C. Redfield, Secretary of Commerce, and William B. H. Dowse, president of the Home Market Club.

Austrians Drive On Montenegrins

Paris, Jan. 8.—The Austrians have begun a terrific offensive against the Montenegrins on the northern front, according to the Montenegrin embassy. Heavy losses have been suffered by both sides. The Austrians captured two villages and part of another. The statement given out by the embassy follows:

"A big battle was begun Thursday, when the Austrians undertook a great offensive on the northern front with considerable effectiveness. Their lines stretch along the Tarna river as far as Rugovo. Near the Mojkovac, Shouido and Berana sector the attacks have been particularly furious. The enemy is throwing into this sector twenty battalions, many cannon and machine guns.

"The battle continued throughout the night, resulting in heavy losses to the Austrians. Our losses were also considerable.

"We maintained most of our positions except the villages of Godoche, Guduiyo and part of Tourlak, which the enemy occupied. The battle is

Kaiser Isolated; Exact Nature of Illness a Secret

By C. F. BERTELLI.

Paris, Jan. 8.

I HAVE the best of reasons for stating that all reports as to the nature of the Kaiser's illness are merely based on surmise.

All that is offically known by the allied governments is that the Emperor is completely isolated, which in itself is regarded as sufficient evidence that he is seriously ill.

To say that he is suffering from cancer is merely guesswork, however.

The most complete secrecy surrounds the Imperial bed chamber, and even residents of Berlin are unable to obtain reliable information.

Briton Warns of Plutocrats' Power in U. S.

W. T. Colyer of London warned the Women's Peace Party at its conference yesterday in Pilgrim Hall to beware of American plutocrats. He urged the establishment of an international council for peace and for the reduction of armaments.

"When you ask about freedom of speech in America, I feel I should say your plutocrats in this country are able to stifle freedom of speech in the economic world more than the plutocrats of England," he said.

"I am against the international armament trust and desire to see the nationalization of the armament industry. I regret to say that not a few archbishops and bishops are stockholders in many of the armament trusts."

Report Demand On the Greeks

Paris, Jan. 8.—Belated information received here from Sofia today by way of Salonica says that the semi-official Bulgarian newspaper Outro, on December 24, published an inspired article declaring that Germany had made vigorous representations to Greece demanding the expulsion of the allied troops from Salonica.

Germany is said to have told the Greek government that if an invasion of Greece was undertaken the Bulgars would join the Germans and Austro-Hungarians, and eventually Bulgaria would demand recompense from Greece for her services in helping eject the Anglo-French forces from Greek soil.

SEIZE OIL CARGO FOR THE GERMANS

Cardiff, Wales, Jan. 8.—The Swedish steamship Canton, 3,422 tons, bound from Yokohama for Germany, with a cargo of oil, has been seized by a British warship. She was browght into port today.

WARM GREETING IN GERMANY FOR FORD PILGRIMS

Party Arrives at the Hague After Creating Interest Among the Germans.

By International News Service.

The Hague, Jan. 8.—The Ford peace party arrived here today, after passing through Germany on the way from Scandinavia.

It was the first tourist train which had passed across German soil since the beginning of the war. Marvellous efficiency was shown by the railroad officials. The train arrived two hours ahead of schedule time.

The efficiency demonstrated by the Germans amazed the peace party. Every courtesy was shown the Americans. Officers were sociably inclined and chatted gaily with the tourists. Soldiers and civilians also gathered around the train at the few stops to talk through the windows.

WARMLY GREETED.

A warm reception was given the party here. After the peace work and conferences which are scheduled for the next few days the party, or at least the majority, will sail from Rotterdam on January 15.

Some of the comments of German officers who chatted with members of the party are illuminating on the attitude of the Germans toward the war.

"I wish you success," said a lieutenant.

"Don't take all the peace back to America. We want some over here," was a major's comment.

There were no signs of war to be observed in Germany, except that troops were to be seen at every station and an occasional Red Cross train passed. The peace crusaders could see the wounded and the operating tables on the trains through the windows.

The food was good and plentiful. There was little meat to be had, but bread and other staples were plentiful.

HAMBURG INTERESTED.

Only four stops were made in Germany. A dining car, the first to be run since the war started, was attached to the train.

No representative of the American government was on hand to protect the train or meet the tourists. As a matter of fact, none was necessary. None of the persons aboard was permitted to step from the cars while in Germany.

Hamburg, where the train stopped for a time, displayed the most interest in the party. A large crowd gathered to peer in at the windows and exchange conversations.

INTERN BRITISH UNDER SEA BOAT

By International News Service.

Amsterdam, Jan. 8.—The Nieuws Van Der Dag says that a British submarine ran aground on Haaksgrond bank and has been interned by the Netherland government. The crew is held in the naval barracks. The submarine is said to have run off her course north of Hinder. She sprang a leak after going aground.

Want a Rosy, Peachy Complexion? Drink Hot Water Every Morning!

Sparkling and vivacious—merry, bright, alert—a good, clear skin and a natural, rosy, healthy complexion are assured only by pure blood. If only every woman could be induced to adopt the morning inside bath, what a gratifying change would take place! Instead of the thousands of sickly, anaemic-looking women and girls, with pasty, sallow, lifeless or muddy complexions; instead of the multitudes of "nerve wrecks," "rundowns," "brain fags" and pessimists we should see a virile, optimistic throng of rosy-cheeked people everywhere.

An inside bath is had by drinking each morning, before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour fermentations and poisons, thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Those subject to sick headache, biliousness, nasty breath, rheumatism, colds; and particularly those who have a pallid, pimpled or sallow complexion, and who are constipated very often, are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store, which will cost but a trifle, but is sufficient to demonstrate the quick and remarkable change in both health and appearance, awaiting those who practice internal sanitation. If you want to see the glow of healthy bloom in your cheeks, to see your skin get clearer and clearer, be sure to try this for a short period. We must remember that inside cleanliness is more important than outside bathing, because the skin does not absorb impurities to contaminate the blood while the pores in the thirty feet of bowels do.—Advertisement.

TWO FIREMEN INJURED IN EAST BOSTON

Ladderman Plunkett Cut with an Axe and Engineer Hart Steps on Hydrant Hook.

Two firemen sustained injuries that necessitated hospital treatment during a fire last night, which damaged the building occupied by the Boston Foundry Company, at No. [illegible] Border street, East Boston, to the extent of $5,000. Benjamin Plunkett of Ladder 21 and Aloysius Hart of Engine 2 will be unable to resume duty for the next few days on account of their injuries.

Plunkett slipped on the ice and fell in such a way as to bring his left hand in contact with the blade of an axe. He was treated by Dr. Joseph G. Haggerty at the East Boston Relief Hospital, and then went home. Later Hart, who is assistant engineer of Engine 2, was brought in. He had stepped on a hydrant hook, the point penetrating his left foot. After the injury had been dressed, Hart was sent home.

The fire was discovered by Archie Huskins, watchman for the City Fuel Company, and an alarm from box 631 was sounded at 9:50 o'clock. The building, a one-story wooden structure, is owned by the fuel company.

MRS. BEATRICE L. MITCHELL plaintiff in alienation action for $50,000, now ill in Quincy Hospital.

CITY TREASURER OF QUINCY IS REMOVED

City Treasurer John Curtis of Quincy, who for the past year has been acting as tax collector, was removed from the latter office yesterday by Mayor Bates after he had failed to comply with a request to resign.

MRS. MITCHELL, IN $50,000 SUIT, ILL AT QUINCY

Plaintiff in Alienation Case Is Suffering From Inflammatory Rheumatism.

Mrs. Beatrice L. Mitchell of Quincy, who a month ago brought suit for $50,000 against Miss Minnie Sawyer of Marshall street, Watertown, charging alienation of her husband's affections, is ill with a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism at the Quincy City Hospital. Mrs. Mitchell was taken to the hospital Monday from the residence of Mrs. Alfred Bean of 36 Revere road, with whom she has been living since bringing suit against Miss Sawyer.

"Freddy's love is worth more than $50,000 and money cannot fully repay me for the affection I lost," declared Mrs. Mitchell shortly after she brought the suit. "Love is as much a part of one as the heart or brain and the loss of it just as injurious as one's mental and physical condition. I loved Freddie with all the devotion I could give, and I am heart-broken."

STABLE 400 WAR HORSES AT WATERTOWN

Old Union Market Stockyards Utilized in Defiance of Board of Health.

The first consignment of horses from the Canadian Northwest to the French for war use, arrived in Watertown last night in sixteen cars and the arrivals were stabled at the Old Union Market stock yards, in defiance of the town's Board of Health and Board of Selectmen.

Four hundred of the horses were unloaded and 800 more, on the way from Chicago, will arrive before the sailing of the Altonia of the French-Canada Steamship Company, Thursday.

Several weeks ago the steamship company and Boston & Maine Railroad petitioned for a permit to keep the horses in the old yard, and after a public hearing their request was dismissed.

No action was taken by the authorities last night, but Selectman George F. Robinson said officials were considering application for an injunction to stop further shipments.

United States District Attorney Anderson notified the town officials that the Board of Health was exceeding its authority in refusing the permit, as they were interfering with interstate commerce.

Three Big Local News "Beats" in Three Successive Editions; a Lively Record Yesterday

The arrest of Albert F. Miller, the missing Providence broker, in a Back Bay hotel, was published in the second edition of the Boston AMERICAN at 9:30 a. m. yesterday—three hours before it was published in any other newspaper.

The story of the Marlboro convent fire, in which 136 girls escaped death, appeared in the Home edition of yesterday's Boston AMERICAN at 11:30 a. m. yesterday—more than an hour before it was published in any other newspaper.

The sale of the Boston Braves—the "biggest" exclusive Boston baseball story of many months—appeared in the AMERICAN at 2 p. m.—more than an hour before it appeared in any other newspaper, and the AMERICAN had a complete, accurate story of the sale when other papers were presenting mere bulletins thereof.

These were by far the three most important New England news stories yesterday, and they were published exclusively, one after the other, in consecutive editions of the Boston AMERICAN before they appeared in any other newspaper.

Of course, the AMERICAN also had ALL the other important news of the day.

These are regular occurrences with the daily AMERICAN. It habitually publishes all the principal news of Boston and New England as fast as it happens. You don't have to wait for the news if you are a Boston AMERICAN reader.

MISS CLEVELAND AT 80 IS PROMOTED

Washington, Jan. 8.—Miss Cynthia Cleveland, a cousin of former President Cleveland, today was promoted from a $1,000 clerkship to a $1,200 clerkship in the office of the auditor for the state and other departments by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo. Miss Cleveland is nearly 80 years old.

WAGES INCREASED AT LOWELL MILL

Lowell, Jan. 8.—The Merrimac Mills cotton spinners and slashers today announced they had received an 8 per cent. increase in wages. The increase for the weavers will reach 10 per cent.

FLEE CONVENT FIRE THROUGH PALL OF SMOKE

Girls, Thoroughly Drilled, Leave Marlboro Building Without Disorder.

Marlboro, Jan. 8.—One hundred and thirty-six girls, of ages ranging from twelve to eighteen years, and more than thirty Sisters escaped from a fire here today which burned through the four-story brick building of St. Anne's Academy. The loss was estimated by the city engineers to be about $25,000.

Through the smoke with the Sisters directing their march, the girls walked four abreast from the classrooms on the second floor to the Academy grounds. Because of the thorough fire drilling in the past their march to safety was conducted in an orderly manner, and there was not a single casualty in connection with the fire.

Though there was no exact time of the period in which the girls had been marshalled on the second floor and had then walked into the open air, it was stated that this had taken but a few minutes. The police said there had not been a case of fright or hysteria, and called their escape the most remarkable they had ever heard of.

Mary Dorothy, Sister Superior, is prostrated tonight as a result of her exertions and the excitement of the day. It was announced that the school will reopen in about three weeks. On this announcement many of the pupils left for their homes. Others found quarters with friends.

Annette Lamoreux, a student, reported the loss of a $150 diamond ring. It was later found by the City Marshal. The Blessed Sacrament, which was rescued by the Rev. F. X. Lariziere, was placed in St. Mary's church until the chapel is rebuilt.

GENERAL ALARM ORDERED.

The first alarm was sounded at 8:30 and Chief E. C. Minehan of the Marlboro Fire Department immediately after reaching the academy ordered a general alarm, calling out all the Marlboro apparatus. Freezing of the water handicapped the firemen and they experienced further trouble from the fact that the flames had worked up through the partitions.

The 136 girls come from all parts of New England and some from Canada. They boarded at the academy, and were all in their classrooms when the fire was discovered.

The first inkling of danger came when twelve-year-old Amanda Meunier of Quebec, P. Q., one of the pupils noticed the smoke. She had been in the corridor, but at once hurried into a classroom and informed Sister Mary Alphonse.

Without sign of excitement, the Sister ordered the fire gong sounded, and herself called on her pupils for the "fire drill."

In the other rooms the other teachers did the same thing.

NO SCAMPERING.

There was no scampering or scurrying. Hats and coats were passed out by the teachers as the children were marching from the various rooms. Down the stairways they walked in four, and in a short space of time were inside the rooms of St. Anthony's Parochial School, a short distance away.

The fire started in the basement, near the boiler rooms. The third and fourth floors were used for the dormitories; the classrooms were on the second floor, and the ground floor was given over to the reception rooms and refectory. The cause of the fire was not known. Near the building is St Mary's Church, but other buildings were not endangered, as the fire was confined to the interior of the academy.

SUICIDE BANK CASHIER FOUND $87,500 SHORT

Southington National Official Killed Self While Federal Examiners Worked.

By International News Service.

Southington, Ct., Jan. 8.—In a statement issued here tonight the directors of the Southington National Bank announced that the examination of the bank by Federal examiners, completed this afternoon, revealed a shortage of $87,500 in the accounts of Cashier Louis K. Curtiss, who committed suicide in his apartments over the bank Thursday afternoon, by drinking a quantity of concentrated ammonia, while the Federal examiners were making their investigation of the bank's affairs.

How the shortage occurred or how Curtiss disposed of the funds, the directors refused to divulge. They announced, however, that the bank is solvent and that after adjusting the loss there will still remain a balance for the protection of the depositors amounting to $54,701.37.

The announcement came like a bombshell following a previous announcement of the directors that no shortage had been discovered. Cashier Curtiss was buried yesterday afternoon. Every effort was made to conceal both the fact of his suicide and the condition of the bank until the obsequies were over.

Directors of the bank were the bearers at the funeral and until tonight had maintained an attitude of confidence in the integrity of the late cashier, which had disarmed suspicion of the true condition of affairs. That the directors and stockholders of the institution have arranged to fully cover the shortage was indicated by tonight's statement.

Curtiss was one of the heaviest stockholders of the institution and had been cashier since 1882. His son, F. K. Curtiss, was prostrated tonight at his home following the announcement.

Curtiss and his family lived a simple, modest life and to all outward appearance neither Curtiss nor his family have benefitted by the bank's loss.

MISS SEYMOUR IS BRIDE OF R. M. FIELD

New York, Jan. 8.—Miss Fanny Lydia Davenport Seymour, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William L. Seymour, was married this afternoon to Richard Montgomery Field in the Marble Collegiate Church. The bride is a granddaughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Davenport, who, many years ago, were among the leading managers and actors of this country, and she is a niece and namesake of the late Fanny Davenport. Mr. Field is a grandson of the late Richard M. Field, for many years manager of the Boston Museum in Boston.

ROXBURY GIRL IS INJURED BY AUTO

Alia Warlow, seven-years-old, of No. 99 Woodcliffe street, Roxbury, was struck by an automobile as she stepped from behind an electric car at Blue Hill avenue and Quincy street, Roxbury, last night. At the City Hospital it is thought her skull may be fractured. The automobile, which is owned by Samuel R. Wright of the Ashmont garage, was driven by Arthur Dodge of Vincent street, Dorchester. Dodge took the girl to the hospital in the car.

M'CALL SAYS ALUMNI MUST SUPPORT TECH

Governor at Annual Dinner Warns Against Expecting Much More Aid from the State

Governor McCall told the Tech alumni gathered at the annual dinner last night of their association at the Copley Plaza, that the Massachusetts Institute of Technology had reached the stage of its grat career "where it must learn to depend less on the State and more upon the loyal and generous support of its powerful alumni to supply the means for its future development and growth."

The Governor was one of the special guests of the evening, and in closing his speech again told the alumni that they must do for their alma mater what Harvard's sons have done for her growth.

"Tech must take a leaf out of the book of that other great institute across the Charles, Harvard University, and must look to its prosperous alumni to do for it what Harvard men have done so nobly for their alma mater," said the Governor.

C. A. STONE SPEAKER.

Another noted speaker was Charles Augustus Stone, president-elect of the association and president of the American International Corporation, the $50,000,000 trade venture which was recently launched for the carrying of American trade into the four corners of the earth.

Mr. Stone declared that America was today facing her greatest opportunity, and that the new Tech would pave the way for this country to surpass the rest of the world in many things. Mr. Stone said:

Continuing, Mr. Stone said:

"America today has the greatest opportunity open to her of any nation of the world. She has a highly intelligent population; she has money; she is at peace. The universities in the warring nations are paralyzed.

"We know what the great universities in Germany and France have done to make those nations efficient in science and art, and war as well. Many of these universities have stood high in the esteem of all nations, but the way is now open to the United States, through the new M. I. T., to surpass the world, and I am sure that the alumni, the faculty and the corporation will see to it that this result is attained."

ON MILITARY TACTICS.

Mr. Stone said the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of Tech's foundation would bring together 5,000 men from all over the world. He said the dedication of the new Technology would take place June 12, 13 and 14, the last day to be devoted to the new buildings and exercises in the great court. Mr. Stone said the educational group would be practically finished in June and that the dormitories would be ready in the Fall.

President Maclaurin told of the inclusion of military tactics in the Tech curriculum beginning in 1862, and said:

"Technology does not exist to train men to fight, but to train them to apply the scientific methods to the practical arts of peaceful life. The inclusion of military tactics in the curriculum of such a school recalls the important truth that some of the fundamental principles of military training are essential to the success of civil enterprises under the conditions of modern life."

The spirit of national preparedness was shown in a striking way at the dinner when a company of the Tech cadets, under Cadet-Colonel T. D. Parsons, assistant instructor in military science at the Institute, marched into the banquet hall, the band playing "Hail to the Chief." The entire 500 diners arose and cheered the marchers.

In front of the head table Cadet-Colonel Parsons presented his company to the Governor as one of the eight companies that make up the Tech Regiment.

More cheering came when the color guards entered bearing the national flag.

Among the other speakers were Samuel Insull of Chicago and Henry J. Horn, retiring president of the alumni association.

MISS EMILY M. LUCK of Cambridge, first woman to serve as dentist in schools of the University City.

Miss Emily M. Luck of No. 333 Windsor street, Cambridge, will tomorrow begin her duties as the first woman school dentist in the University City.

A room has been provided in the Cambridge Hospital, and each morning from 9 to 12 Dr. Luck will treat the teeth of the school children.

The young woman, who received her appointment a short time ago, is a daughter of George A. Luck, chief boiler inspector for the State. She is a graduate of the Cambridge English High School and of Tufts Dental School in the class of 1913.

E. H. S. 1911 CLASS REUNION TUESDAY

The English High School class of 1911 will meet for its fifth reunion Tuesday, at Hotel Plaza.

The committee is planning a very elaborate affair and a big time is assured. The entertainment offered will consist of orchestra singers from Jerome H. Remick Company, Leo Feist, Knickerbocker, Waterman, Berlin and Synder.

The guests will be John F. Casey, Charles H. Burrill, George W. Coleman and John A. Marsh.

Tickets may be obtained from Bernard Landers, secretary-treasurer of the class, No. 13 Irving street, Boston.

The officers of the class are: Carleton M. Allen, president; Justin L. Bromberg, vice-president, and Bernard Landers, secretary-treasurer.

CONFINED ON SHIP; HORSEMEN OBJECT

London, Jan. 8.—Thirty American horse tenders have made a protest to the American Embassy that they are being held on board the British steamship Kalvinia at Manchester under dangerous sanitary conditions. The officer at Manchester declined to permit the Americans to go ashore because they had no passports, and under the new regulations of the State Department at Washington, the American Consul could not issue certificates of citizenship to them.

MATTAPAN BOY IS INJURED BY AUTO

Francis J. Dadirio, eleven years old, of Edgewater Drive, Mattapan, while crossing River street in that section yesterday was struck by an automobile and knocked down, sustaining a fracture at the base of the skull. The boy was taken to the City Hospital in the Morton street police station ambulance.

The machine was owned by the Nash Taxi Company of Bigelow street, Quincy, and driven by Lemuel G. Murray of the same address.

HANS SCHMIDT TO DIE NEXT FRIDAY

OSSINING, N. Y., Jan. 8.—Warden George W. Kirchwey has set Hans Schmidt's execution for Friday of this week. Schmidt, a New York priest, was found guilty of murdering Anna Aumeller.

PNEUMONIA DEATH RATE MOUNTS HIGH

To 81 Fatalities for This Disease for Last Week Are Added 10 from the Grippe.

Eighty-one persons died from pneumonia in Boston last week, as against thirty-six deaths from that disease for the corresponding week of last year. This was an increase of 125 per cent. in the pneumonia death rate, which, according to physicians last night, was an unusual jump.

Warnings to observe preventive rules and precautions such as those issued by Boston's Health Commissioner, Dr. Francis X. Mahoney, last week, were repeated by physicians yesterday in view of the great prevalence of both pneumonia and grippe.

Ten deaths from grippe had occurred up tolast night since New Year's Day. Of this number seven were non-residents.

The total Boston death roll for all diseases, which jumped from 222 for the last week in 1915 to 270 for the New Year's week, was regarded as further significant of the widespread prevalence of the influenza and pneumonia.

LAUDER HAPPY IN "NIGHT BEFORE"

Famous Scotch Comedian Scores Big Success in Opening of Copley Theatre.

Harry Lauder's witticisms and Harry Lauder's songs made notable the presentation of Harry Lauder's own play, "The Night Before," marking the opening of the Copley Theatre, formerly the Toy Theatre, last night. The production is a domestic comedy in three acts and the famous Scotch comedian, as might have been expected, saw to it that it teemed with witty dialect along with dialogue of such nature as to place him in immediate favor as a playwright.

The plot revolves about Bessie MacBeth, promised bride of plumber Jimmy Morrison, with the connivance of her "mither," but without Rab MacBeth, Bessie's father, having had any hand in the arrangements. The fact that he is to lose his "bairn" and that the "ald hame" is to be lonely without her causes him to offer objections.

These vanish, however, when he learns that Jimmy has distinguished himself by stopping a runaway pony and saving a laddie from death.

Burglars Blow Open Unlocked Safe in Norwell

Burglars blew open yesterday the post office safe at Norwell Centre, on which Postmaster E. H. Sparrell had forgotten, for the first time in months, to hang up his usual notice to burglars that the safe was unlocked and no one need use explosives to open the door.

For their unnecessary trouble the burglars secured about two dollars in stamps and change.

Mrs. Wilder, opposite the post office, heard an explosion. From her window she saw three men run from the post office, then the sound of an auto in a hurry.

Chief Osborne and Postmaster Sparrell, summoned by telephone, found the safe had been shattered with nitro-glycerine. Office furniture was wrecked.

Telephone alarm to watch for an auto-load of burglars was sent around the countryside.

The postmaster feels dejected to think that burglars should come on the one night he forgot to put up his notice that "This safe door is not locked."

TWO MOTIONS IN ELECTIONS CASE

Representative Joseph M. Levenson of Chelsea, against whom a petition was filed by Lawrence F. Quigley and others, alleging violation of the election laws, has filed two motions in the Superior Court, claiming the petition was not filed under the statute, as it was not signed by five persons having the right to vote in the Representative district, and that the court has no jurisdiction.

Quigley was defeated by Levenson for the House and filed the petition, claiming the winner violated the corrupt practices act by expending more than $100 in his election.

PLYMOUTH THEATRE MENACED BY FIRE

The Plymouth Theatre was threatened by a fire which started in the basement of the building No. 117 Eliot street yesterday. The blaze worked up to the store of C. A. Bray Company on the first floor, spreading to the next floor and through the partition into the two and a half story building, No. 123 Eliot street. Good work by firemen prevented the fire from reaching the theatre.

Only the Latest Dances Down for Radcliffe Prom

There will be no old fashioned dances at the Radcliffe '16 Senior Prom in the Agassiz House next Tuesday evening.

Twenty-two dances are down on the order, four of which are waltzes and a like number fox trots. The rest? One-steps and just the raggiest music imaginable, say the tickled seniors.

Unlike the Harvard Proms, flowers will be doubly welcome, and candy regarded as far from contraband. The girls are incidentally planning some big surprises. It might be added that Radcliffe hasn't had any Proms during Leap Year for some time.

Instead of the private boxes of other years, one large box is to hold the girls and their friends. Dancing will start at 9 o'clock and last until 1. Dawn and lawn dancing is strictly under the ban.

The patronesses will be Dean May Boody, Mrs. LeBaron R. Briggs, Mrs. Tuttle, mother of Rachael Tuttle, the 1916 president, and Mrs. Miller, mother of Doris Miller, chairman of the prom committee.

SAVE TUGG AND THREE BARGES

Vineyard Haven, Jan. 8.—The big ocean tug Western and three barges were towed in today by the tugs Lykens and International after being in danger of foundering during the night when the Western's shaft broke.

The Western was bound from Boston to New York towing three light barges. In the height of the gale her shaft gave way and the tug and her charges drifted helplessly all night. When daylight came her signals were seen at Chatham. The coast guardship Acushnet was telegraphed to at New Bedford and she put out. Before she arrived the other tugs came up and got lines to the disabled craft just as they were drifting on to the shoals. The Western is owned by the Central Railroad of New Jersey and the barges by the New York, Ontario & Western.

ARLINGTON MAN IS SUED FOR DIVORCE

The property of Peter Tenneson of Arlington was yesterday attached for $20,000 in the Suffolk Registry of Deeds in connection with a divorce libel filed by his wife, Hilma Sofia Tenneson. The libel charges intoxication and cruelty. Mrs. Tenneson asks alimony and custody of five children.

YOUTH FOUND UNCONSCIOUS IN THEATRE SEAT

Skull Probably Fractured and Police Unable to Establish His Identity.

The finding of an unidentified youth unconscious in his seat in a Scollay square theatre yesterday afternoon gave the police a mystery which set them to investigating a number of clews.

The police announced their belief that the youth was a college student, and that possibly he was the victim of an attack in the Bowdoin square district. He was taken to the Relief Hospital where the surgeons were of the opinion that his condition was due to a blow on the head.

While searching the district in the hope of learning something of what had happened to the youth, the police also made inquiries to learn his identity. They said they believed he might prove to be a student at Amherst College, but this was on the fact that his coat bore the name of a firm of Amherst clothing dealers.

The first known of the youth was when the attention of an usher in the theatre was attracted to him. The usher thought he was asleep but, going nearer, noticed that something was wrong. The police were notified and began an inquiry.

The hospital physicians after examination reported their belief that his skull may have been fractured. The mystery victim remained unconscious for hours.

According to the authorities the boy walked into the theatre and took a seat before feeling the full effects of the blow on the head.

In the hope of identifying the youth, the police sent out the following description:

Age—About seventeen.
Height—Five feet nine inches.
Weight—About 140 pounds.
Hair—Brown.
Eyes—Blue.
Clothing — Brown checked mackinaw coat, white shirt with blue and black stripes, garnet sweater, brown woolen gloves, dark trousers, black leather belt bearing the initial "S," light checked cap, black shoes and stockings and light colored underclothing.

A Certain Former Governor Is Leaving for the Orient, and a Certain Lovely Lady May Soon Depart in the Same Direction, and—ISN'T This Just the Awfullest Town for Gossip?

Boston, in many respects, is rapidly qualifying for the municipal class already distinguished by Bangor, Me., Nashua, N. H., Burlington, Vt., and Clinton, Mass.

They'll tell you, in Bangor, Nashua, Burlington and Clinton, that if a fellow walks home from church with a girl, or sees her home from a party, just once — only once, mind you—everybody for miles around will take it for granted that the young man and the young lady are "keeping company."

Timid young men have been frightened out of town by gossip of this kind.

Brave young men, young men who mean business, do not mind it. Folks can just talk and talk and talk and talk, but the young man who means business, the young man who has got to have that particular girl, marches straight ahead until he lands at the altar and hears the parson asking the usual questions.

Bringing the matter home to Boston, one has in mind the case of a certain distinguished son of Massachusetts who has recently been freed from very exacting duties and who has lately announced his intention to visit the Far East, and be gone perhaps three months or so.

LEAVES FOR THE ORIENT.

It is now announced that, within a short time, the gracious, charitable and very dear lady whose name has at times been coupled by Dame Rumor with that of the said distinguished son of Massachusetts, may also depart for the Far East.

Governor Walsh, in other words, leaves this week for the Orient; and, while he is away, will most assuredly call upon the B. Sumner Welleses in Tokio. The former Governor is a warm friend of young Mr. B. Sumner Welles, an attache of the American embassy, and, indeed, was one of those who helped to place Mr. Welles in the diplomatic service.

Mabel Hunt Slater, the party of the second part, as legal documents might put it, admitted last night at her home in Beacon street that she, too, contemplates a trip to the Far East.

Mrs. Slater would not think of going to the Orient without calling upon the B. Sumner Welleses at Tokio, for young Mrs. Welles, as of course you remember, was Esther Slater. The Welleses were married last April at the Slater place in Webster, where Mrs. Slater owns mills and everything. Governor Walsh was there. Mill hands and villagers made a feast day of the occasion.

"It is a fact," Mrs. Slater admitted last night to a most inquisitive young reporter, "that Miss Ray and I have been strongly urged by Esther to pay her a visit. I suppose we may do so, but as yet I have made no plans for the trip. However, I have never made plans for any trip very long ahead of it."

RESIGNS AS TRUSTEE.

Mrs. Slater repeated what she had said before. "This publicity is extremely distasteful," she said, "and I do wish the newspapers would drop it."

Which is just what the former Governor has said, times without number!

However, one notes certain uncontrovertible facts of possible importance:

1. Railroads.
2. Steamships.
3. The Pacific Ocean.
4. The Orient.
5. Japan.
6. Tokio.
7. The cozy home of Mr. and Mrs. B. Sumner Welles: flower gardens, youth, and the possible effect of good example.

At all events, Mrs. Slater resigned yesterday her place as a member of the Board of Trustees of the Massachusetts General Hospital. She was appointed to the Board in 1914 by Governor Walsh. Her term would have expired next month. The gossips suggested that her resignation at a time when she had only one month to serve may have something to do with the Orient and such like. Her resignation is the first to be placed in the hands of Governor McCall.

There may, of course, be ab-so-lutely nothing to it, so for goodness sake lets keep it to ourselves and not go blabbing it all over town. Can't a fellow and a girl visit the same island, thousands and thousands of miles away, and call upon the same dear, loving young couple of friends, without everybody assuming that they're "engaged."

Let the young folks alone, bless 'em!

CURLEY SPEAKS AT BANQUET IN NEW YORK

Boston Mayor Advocates Merchant Marine at American-Irish Historical Society.

By International News Service.

New York, Jan. 8.—Two hundred and fifty persons assembled in the Waldorf-Astoria tonight for the eighteenth annual banquet of the American-Irish Historical Society.

The diners had expected to honor Thomas Addis Emmet, a direct descendant of Robert Emmet, the Irish patriot. Mr. Emmet is eighty-nine years old. Several days ago he suffered an accident in which three of his ribs were broken, and he was unable to attend.

Rev. John Cavanaugh of Notre Dame College responded to the toast "Thomas Addis Emmet."

Joseph I. C. Clark, president of the society, was toastmaster. The principal address was delivered by Mayor Curley of Boston, who spoke on "The American Merchant Marine." Mayor Curley said in part:

"Public sentiment has been so crystalized that the American people will not be satisfied unless Congress passes sufficient appropriations to maintain with honor American liberties on the high seas. The idea of national defence is a good one, but it should not obscure the value of a merchant marine.

The American people are under the deepest obligations to that clarion of the future, William Randolph Hearst. With almost prophetic vision he has pointed out not only the weaknesses of our defence, but the results which must inevitably fololw in the event of a foreign war, even if the United States does not take part in it."

Addresses were also made by Thomas Maginnis, Jr., and Professor Arthur F. J. Renny.

Afterward telephone connection was established with San Francisco and felicitations were exchanged between Mayor Curley and Mayor Rolph of San Francisco.

Each guest was provided with a receiver and listened to a brief address by Mayor Rolph.

CITY TO BUY NEW FIRE TRACTORS

Fire Commissioner John Grady yesterday asked and received Mayor Curley's permission to buy seven $3,600 two-wheel tractors without advertising. These tractors, which will take $25,200 of the public funds, are to be bought from the Front Driver Motor Company, Hoboken, N. J., without competition.

Commissioner Grady wrote to Mayor Curley:

"My reason for desiring to make this purchase without advertising is that we have already in service in this department several of these tractors which are giving satisfactory service and it has been demonstrated that they are adapted for the requirements of the city."

GIRL FIGHTS OFF LOWELL ASSAILANT

Lowell, Jan. 8.—While returning to her home after having been paid off at the plant of the United States Cartridge Company, seventeen-year-old Pearl Chamberlain was attacked by an unidentified man who attempted to steal her purse. She screamed and fought and her assailant ran away.

INDIGESTION AND STOMACH MISERY JUST VANISHES

The moment "Pape's Diapepsin" reaches the stomach all distress goes.

Instantly stops any sourness, gases, heartburn, acidity, dypepsia.

"Really does" put bad stomach in order—"really does" overcome indigestion, dyspepsia, gas, heartburn and sourness in five minutes—that—just that—makes Pape's Diapepsin the largest selling stomach regulator in the world. If what you eat ferments into stubborn lumps, you belch gas and eructate sour, undigested food and acid; head is dizzy and aches; breath foul; tongue coated; your insides filled with bile and indigestible waste, remember the moment "Pape's Diapepsin" comes in contact with the stomach all such distress vanishes. It's truly astonishing—almost marvelous, and the joy is its harmlessness.

A large fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin will give you a hundred dollars worth of satisfaction or your druggist hands you your money back.

It's worth its weight in gold to men and women who can't get their stomachs regulated. It belongs in your home—should always be kept handy in case of a sick, sour, upset stomach during the day or night. It's the quickest, surest and most harmless stomach regulator in the world.

Pape's Diapepsin instantly neutralizes the acids in the stomach, stops food fermentation or souring, absorbs gases and starts the digestion. The relief is quick, sure, wonderful—stomach sufferers have a pleasant surprise awaiting them. For sale by Riker-Jaynes and all reliable druggists.—Advertisement.

THREE WOMEN DIVIDE INTEREST IN MOHR DEATH TRIAL

MRS. ELIZABETH BLAIR MOHR, widow of the murdered man, a woman of high religious ideals, of refinement, who stands accused of guilty knowledge of the slaying of her husband.

FLORENCE ORMSBY, the doctor's secretary, who was in the confidence of both the doctor and Mrs. Mohr, in possessing many secrets and who will be a leading witness.

EMILY BURGER, wounded at the same time the doctor was murdered, is expected to tell a first-hand story of the dramatic tragedy which so nearly cost her own life.

POSTAL CHARGE OF 'LAND JOBBING'

Stormy Hearing on Plan to Consolidate Postoffices; "Selfish Interests" Said to Be Busy

Remonstrant Declares Government Is Being Buncoed; Men of Wealth and Prominence Attend

Charges of "land-jobbing" and the exploitation of selfish interests, and that the United States government was being buncoed, were made yesterday at the mass meeting held at City Hall to protest against the removal of the Fenway, Back Bay and Essex street postal stations and the merging of the two former into a central Back Bay station at a point on Huntington avenue opposite the Children's Hospital, south of Massachusetts avenue.

The session was stormy and decidedly personal at times. Its importance was denoted by the wealth and prominence of the remonstrants and by the size of the assemblage that taxed the capacity of the old Aldermanic chamber.

CHARGES LAND JOBBING.

Patrick J. Doherty of No. 554 Newbury street, interested in real estate on that street, was the first to mention "land-jobbing" in connecion with the transfer of both Back Bay postal stations to a central station on Huntington avenue, just beyond Massachusetts avenue.

Mr. Doherty charged President M. H. Gulesian of the Huntington Avenue Improvement Association with having selfish motives, because of his large property holdings in the vicinity of Huntington and Massachusetts avenues.

"Mr. Gulesian is anxious for the central office near Massachusetts avenue," added Mr. Doherty, "because he is the owner of the Royal Arcanum Building, the St. James Theatre and much other property in that vicinity. It's a land-jobbing deal and nothing else, and they want to put it through at our expense."

Postmaster William F. Murray, who served as counsel for the plan of concentration, resented Mr. Doherty's use of the term "land-jobbing." He interrupted Mr. Doherty to ask if he had any evidence to back up such an assertion, and Mr. Doherty remarked that he merely used the word in a general sense. But he said he had been given to understand that the land of the proposed concentration site, a parcel 10,000 feet square, was to cost $8 a foot, a price he and others considered exorbitant.

Postmaster Murray explained that no sale had taken place and he was curious to learn where the report that the site was to cost $8 a foot originated.

HALL INTERRUPTS.

Frank C. Hall, proprietor of the Hotel Somerset, interrupted here to inform Postmaster Murray that the postmaster himself had cited that figure at a meeting of a committee of remonstrants held at the Somerset.

Mr. Murray said he could not recollect that he mentioned anything about the price but recalled that Mr. Williams had said something about $8 a foot.

Henry M. Williams, who guided the affairs of the remonstrants, said the Huntington avenue site would cost every bit of $8, and possibly more.

Postmaster Murray—How do you figure that when no sale has taken place?

Mr. Williams—On a basis of rental as it is always figured. I understand

Hunt Chinese on False Alarm at Mystic Docks

The Boston and Chelsea police and the United States Immigration Service officials on Long Wharf were mixed up in a false alarm of Chinamen escaping from the British steamship Batiscan at the Everett Coal & Coke Company's pier on the Mystic, yesterday. The tempest in a teapot arose from the inexperience of a watchman set to guard the Chinese members of the crew.

There is a penalty of $500 attached to letting a Chinaman escape from a ship. When the guard saw three Malayans walk off the ship and board a car for Boston he thought three of his charges were escaping, believing Malays and Chinamen came under the same head.

Inspector Sullivan went to the ship, lined up the Chinese members of the crew and found them all there. Later the Malays, who had been to a movie show came back on board and the ship sailed for Louisburg, N. S., for another load of coal.

LAST DELAYED SHIP PASSES CANAL

Panama, Jan. 8.—The steamer Newton, the last vessel waiting for passage through the Panama canal, passed through the waterway. The Newton, drawing twenty-seven feet, has the greatest draft of any vessel using the canal since it was closed last September.

Major-General Goethals Governor of the Canal Zone, said the canal is not yet in condition for continuous traffic. He also said that it probably would remain closed for a considerable period.

CHANGE ROUTE OF HARRISON AV. CASE

Commencing tomorrow and continuing until further notice, the Harrison avenue extension cars, which now run inward via Washington, Kneeland, Harrison avenue and Harrison avenue extension to Hayward place, and returning Harrison avenue, Kneeland, Washington streets, will be run inward via Washington, Essex, returning via Harrison avenue, Kneeland and Washington streets, both morning and evening.

PHONES POLICE TO PLEASE ARREST HIM

Harry Peterson of Flint street, Lynn, telephoned to the police of that city yesterday that if they did not arrest him he would commit suicide. Policemen found him brandishing a butcher knife. His daughter, Arvina, eloped to Worcester on Thursday. Peterson went there with an attorney and succeeded in preventing the marriage.

3 TEAMSTERS HELD AS SHOE THIEVES

Three teamsters, charged with stealing 1,100 shoes of the Woodbury Shoe Company, from Boston & Maine freight cars, were held in bonds in Charlestown District Court yesterday for a continued hearing on January 20. They are Robert J. Maguire and William Donahue of Charlestown and Henry K. Lyman of Somerville. The shoes are valued at $5,000.

CUTTERS REJECT OFFER OF RAISE

Brockton, Jan. 8.—Seven hundred shoe cutters gathered at a mass meeting here and voted to reject a proposition made recently by the manufacturers of the city $22.50 a week, with a nine-hour day.

The cutters, who now receive from $18 to $21.50 a week, with a nine-hour day, demanded $24 and an eight-hour day. The union's executive committee meets Monday to present its demands again.

RESCUE 3 HANSON CHILDREN IN FIRE

Hanson, Jan. 8.—Three small children of Mr. and Mrs. John Aubert were rescued, one slightly burned, by Selectman George T. Moore and Frank Howland at a fire in the Aubert home today. The loss was estimated by the police at $3,500.

RANTOUL KEEPS UP FIGHT FOR CHILDREN

Father Plans Appeal to Superior Court for the Sole Custody of His Two Young Daughters

Not Satisfied with Decision of Judge McIntire Denying His Petition for Custody of Children

Edward L. Rantoul of Beverly and Salem will begin a new contest for the sole custody of his two children, Mabel, eleven years old, and Harriet C., aged nine. By a recent decision of Judge McIntire in the East Cambridge Probate Court, Mrs. Lois Burnett Rantoul, granddaughter of the poet Lowell, retains custody of these two children for eight months in the year.

It is the second time that Mrs. Rantoul and her husband have been in court and aired all of their family secrets in the contest over the two children.

Judge McIntire held this last hearing on a petition of Mr. Rantoul, who alleged he had newly discovered evidence to show his wife incompetent to have the custody of his daughters even a part of the year.

Now the attorneys for Mr. Rantoul are preparing an appeal from the decision of Judge McIntire and will petition for another hearing before a judge of the Superior Court, without a jury.

In making the decision dismissing Mr. Rantoul's petition for the sole custody of the children, Judge McIntire characterized Mrs. Rantoul's conduct with Chester Rumrill, a Springfield banker and clubman, as "reprehensible." Rumrill was the central figure of the trial and was often referred to in the testimony as "Chippie."

Thomas N. Hunt of the firm of Gaston, Snow & Saltonstall, attorney for Mr. Rantoul, refused yesterday to discuss the case.

He was asked: "Do you intend to file an appeal from the decision of Judge McIntire, within the next thirty days?"

"I have nothing to say," replied Mr. Hunt.

"Is the Rantoul case ended? Mr. Hunt."

"I have nothing to say," came the answer from the Rantoul lawyer.

It is known that Mr. Rantoul is not satisfied with this defeat in the attempt to take the custody of his children from his wife.

Thomas W. Proctor, counsel for Mrs. Rantoul, and many of her intimate friends look upon the decision of Judge McIntire as a victory for Mrs. Rantoul, who carried the contest to her husband's own ground. Yesterday Mrs. Rantoul at her Jamaica Plain home was congratulated by her friends over retaining the custody of her two daughters as previously ordered.

Mr. Proctor said yesterday that he was waiting any further action on the part of Mr. Rantoul, but couldn't say when this might come.

Mr. Rantoul has thirty days to file appeal and can ask for a new hearing before a Superior Court justice. If the appeal is not filed with Judge McIntire within the specified time, the case cannot be reopened.

VOTE THIS WEEK ON PHILIPPINES BILL

By International News Service.

Washington, Jan. 8.—The Philippines bill consumed most of the Senate's session today again. The prospects are that the bill will come to a vote in the Senate about the middle of next week. The final passage of the measure, however, seems assured.

SOCIETY AT TRIAL OF RICH AUTHOR

Professors and Preachers and Writers Listen to Evidence Against Gerald Stanley Lee

Springfield Court Room Crowded at Hearing of Millionaire on Charge of Killing Boy with Auto

Springfield—at least society Springfield—has been attending the trial of Gerald Stanley Lee, author and millionaire, of Northampton, on the charge of manslaughter.

The case has been going on for nearly a week, and now the lawyers are to file briefs with Judge Wallace R. Heddy. Not only is Springfield society interested in the case, but professors of Amherst and Smith Colleges, as well as prominent ministers, have been daily police court spectators.

Lee is charged with running down and killing twelve-year-old Michael Buoniconti with his automobile early in October. The boy died from a fracture of the skull. The accident happened at the corner of Water and Spring streets, Springfield. Lee was in town with his wife, who was riding in the machine at the time of the accident.

Gerald Stanly Lee is prominent as a magazine writer. His father is the founder and president-emeritus of the American International College of Springfield and a former minister.

The case has aroused more interest in Springfield and its surrounding suburbs than any case tried in that section in years.

PROMINENT MEN IN COURT.

President Marion Leroy Burton of Smith College, with President-Emeritus Seeley of Smith, Admiral Charles Walker, U. S. N. (retired), and George W. Cable, the author, are among the more prominent spectators. Also numbered among the society of Western Massachusetts in the courtroom each day is the Rev. Philip S. Moxom of the South Church, Springfield, delegate to the International Peace Conference at Vienna when the war broke out, and President Doggett of the Springfield Young Men's Christian Association College, who was a college room mate of Lee's.

At the last court session, on Friday, with Attorney Daniel E. Leary of Springfield, attorney for Mr. Lee, arguing in behalf of his client, and asserting that the boy was playing in the street, and not looking out for traffic, and also applying for a warrant for one of the witnesses for the prosecution for perjury, were three professors from Amherst and two from Smith College, beside the other notable spectators.

Mr. Lee began his career, like his father, as a minister in the Congregational Church. Then he set about writing. One of his best-known works is "Crowds," which was widely commented upon both in this country and abroad. He has also written around Dr. Rose's famous sermon on "Hell," and this work is well known all over the literary world.

"HARD TO DESCRIBE."

Among Mr. Lee's most prominent books are "The Lost Art of Reading," "The Child and the Book," "The Shadow and the Book," "The Voice and the Machine," "The Inspired Millionaire" and "Crowds."

Attorney Leary in describing Mr. Lee and his works says: "He is both a Carlyle and a buffoon. He interests you, and then, when you think that he is taking the wrong view-point, and are about to throw his book or magazine on the floor, some new angle comes up and you read on. He is the hardest man in the world to describe."

SIX CURATES ARE GIVEN NEW FIELD OF WORK

Transfers in Archdiocese of Boston Will Go Into Effect Tomorrow.

The following changes among the clergy of the archdiocese of Boston will be announced officially in the coming edition of the Pilot. The different transfers and appointments go into effect tomorrow. The six priests affected are curates and resume duties of curates at their new places:

Rev. Henry C. Reardon, transferred from St. Margaret's, Lowell, to the Church of the Sacred Heart, Roslindale.

Rev. W. W. Gunn, from the Church of the Sacred Heart, Roslindale, to the Church of St. Philip, Boston.

Rev. William H. O'Connell, transferred from St. Phillip's, Boston, to the Church of St. Margaret, Lowell.

Rev. Joseph M. Fitzgibbons, from St. Cecilia's, Back Bay to the Church of St. James, Salem.

Rev. J. J. Fletcher, from St. William's, Dorchester, to St. Cecilia's, Boston.

Rev. William P. Drennan, from St. James', Salem, to St. William's, Dorchester.

101 South End Children Enjoy Day at the Zoo

Children from the South End—one hundred and one in actual number, were given the time of their lives at Franklin Park Zoo yesterday afternoon where they arrived in special cars.

As guests of Commissioner Charles Gibson of the Park and Recreation department they went to the Elephant house where they were entertained with a performance by Molly, Waddy and Tony. The performance was given under the direction of John Fleisher, their trainer, and Daniel Harkins.

Alexander L. Peckham was in charge of the children, assisted by Miss Minna Davis of the South End.

DR. KARL MUCK TOO ILL TO CONDUCT

New York, Jan. 8.—Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was unable to direct it at the concert at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn. Arthur Brooke, flutist, announced that the director would be unable to appear because of an attack of the grippe. Ernest Schmidt, a first violinist, conducted.

At the Gotham Hotel, where Dr. Muck is stopping, it was announced that he was feeling much better and expected to wield his baton at the concert to be given this afternoon at Carnegie Hall.

NEWBURYPORT GIRL TO READ POEMS IN SUIT

Counsel for Miss Mooney Tells of Action Against Rich Haverhill Manufacturer.

Newburyport, Jan. 8.—The $30,000 suit of Miss Marian Mooney of this city against Alfred A. Ordway, a rich Haverhill manufacturer, promises to be interesting. According to David P. Page, Miss Mooney's attorney, Mr. Ordway was in the habit of sending Miss Mooney letters and poems which breathed of love and tenderness in every line. Mr. Page said yesterday:

"We do not ask a settlement nor do we want one. We would rather go to court with our case. I have in my safe a score of letters and poems sent to my client by Mr. Ordway, which, I am satisfied, will convince any fair jury of Mr. Ordway's broken promise to marry her."

Miss Mooney is a brunette and pretty.

Former Mayor Robert E. Burke, counsel for Mr. Ordway, said: "There will be no settlement. Mr. Ordway, who is an aged man and one of the leading and most respected citizens of Haverhill, has no intention of making any settlement in the plaintiff's favor. He is ready to meet these charges in court, if they ever come to court."

SCENE SET FOR COURT BATTLE

Disclosures in the Evidence Threaten to Involve Names of Persons of Social Prominence

Widow and Three Negroes Accused to Be Placed on Equal Footing Before Bar of Justice

Providence, Jan. 8.—The Mohr trial—the most dramatic in its possibilities and the most compelling in its interest that Rhode Island courts ever saw—will open Monday morning in Court Room No. 1, Superior Court Building, College and Benefit streets.

The trial is for the murder of Dr. C. Franklin Mohr, who was one of the most picturesque figures in the medical profession in this State. His income before his death has been set as high as $75,000 a year; his estate at something like $500,000.

The mere identity of the accused persons is sufficient to set the trial in a class by itself; for they are:

MRS. ELIZABETH BLAIR MOHR, widow of the murdered man, a woman of high religious ideals, of refinement, and who occupied a place in the social worlds of both Providence and Newport.

HENRY SPELLMAN, a negro chore boy.

CECIL VICTOR BROWN, a negro hostler.

GEORGE W. HEALIS, a negro chauffeur.

3 WOMEN CENTRE OF INTEREST.

Dr. Mohr was shot to death, and Miss Emily Burger, one of his employes who was riding in the automobile with him, was desperately wounded, on the night of August 31, on the road to Newport.

The three negroes, the police say, have confessed to the crime; Healis the chauffeur, stopping the car in the appointed spot while the others fired the shots.

But the negroes, according to the police, say Mrs. Mohr had prompted them to do the deed, promising $5,000 to be divided among them.

Three women divide interest in the case as it goes to trial. They are:

Mrs. Mohr, the central figure, the accused.

Florence Ormsby, the doctor's secretary, who was in the confidence of both the doctor and Mrs. Mohr, and who will be a leading witness.

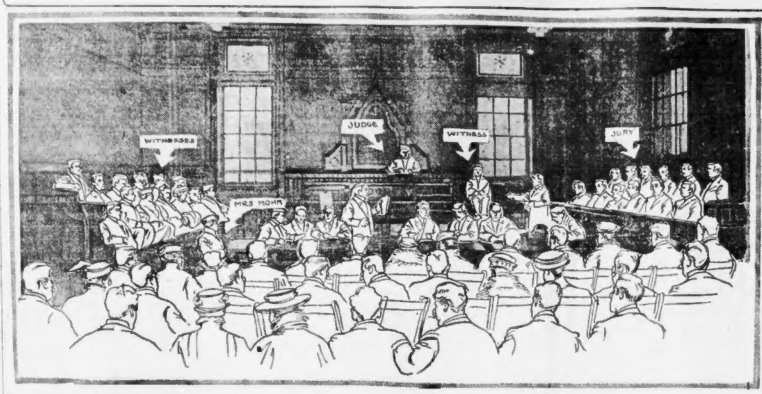
Emily Burger, who was wounded at the same time the doctor was murdered, and for jealousy of whom the State will allege Mrs. Mohr determined on her husband's death. She is expected to tell a first-hand story of the tragedy.

Because of the nature of the doctor's practice, particular interest attaches to the trial. The practice was entirely with women, and it was of a nature which put him outside the pale of his profession, it will be claimed.

MOHR TRIAL WILL OPEN TOMORROW

Court Scene Set for Hearing in Rhode Island's Most Dramatic Case.

DIAGRAM of the little Providence courtroom in which Mrs. Mohr and the three men jointly charged with the murder of her husband will be tried, beginning tomorrow and some of those who will have part in Rhode Island's most famous criminal case.



Attorney-General Herbert A. Rice, who will advise in the conduct of the prosecution.

Assistant Attorney-General Abbott C. Phillips, who will be in direct charge of the State's case.

John J. Fitzgerald, chief of counsel for Mrs. Mohr, regarded as Rhode Island's leading criminal lawyer.

William H. Lewis of oBston, former Assistant U. S. District Attorney, connected in advisory capacity with the defence of the three accused men.

His case books, with the record of his patients and the amount of their payments, are in the hands of the police.

Mrs. Mohr has said that through these books the names of women prominent in Newport and Providence society would be brought into the case.

DISCLOSURES FEARED.

There have been intimations that this was true from other sources. Powerful influences are at work, it is claimed, to stifle this sensational feature of the case, and one man made the statement:

"If certain people had heard of this murder in time, they would have seen to it that no one was even arrested."

The three negroes and the delicate and cultured woman will sit side by side in court; for in the eyes of the law their position is equal. They are accused of murder.

The courtroom where the trial will be held has been made ready to the last detail. Sheriff Andrew J. Wilcox and six or eight deputies will have the task of preserving order and seeing that all goes smoothly. Sheriff Wilcox is thus in the position of stage manager for the remarkable drama that is to be enacted.

SCENE OF TRIAL.

The court room is not large. It will accommodate at most a hundred spectators. The interior of the room is finished somewhat in the English fashion. The walls of a dull tone, with a figured, conventional border about the top. The ceiling is beamed and panelled. The doorway, and the Judge's bench are each patterned like the old oak furnishings which are to be noted in English legal and religious edifices.

The Judge's bench is set against a wall between two windows. Two windows on one side of the room, behind the jury box light the Judge's bench and table. Judge Charles F. Stearns will occupy the bench during the trial.

The Judge's bench is elevated and before it and somewhat lower is the clerk's desk.

Robert Root is clerk of courts and it lies in his hands to oversee the task of recording the testimony that shall be taken and of keeping in order the many documents in the case.

Before the clerk's bench lies an open space. A rail surrounds this enclosure. At one side there are two tables, one for the attorneys of the State the other for the attorneys for the four accused persons.

DEFENDANTS' CHAIRS TOGETHER.

Along the rear of this inclosure are ranged seven chairs. Four of these, in the corner nearest the door, will be occupied by the accused woman and the three negroes. Just behind them and outside the inclosure, a deputy sheriff will sit. To one side is the high desk of the court officer, beside the door. Other deputies will be near at hand in case of need.

The attorneys' tables are at that side of the inclosure on the Judge's left, and the jury box is separated from these tables by a narrow passage along which witnesses will go to and from the witness box.

Just outside the bar inclosure, behind the chairs where the accused woman and negroes will sit, a number of tables have been placed for the reporters who will come from New York, Boston and other cities to report for their papers the transactions in the case.

Behind these tables, again, spectators will sit.

Careful preparations have been made for the trial, and sixty talesmen have been summoned. It is hoped by the court that the jury may be secured in a single day, and from these sixty, though the wide publicity given the case may make this task difficult.

A distinguished array of counsel will appear. Judge Rathbun is one of the best-known judges in the State. For the State, the case will be conducted by Abbott C. Phillips, assistant attorney general, while Attorney General Herbert A. Rice will attend the trial for most of the time and take a hand upon occasion. His other duties have made it impossible for him to assume full charge.

GREAT ARRAY OF COUNSEL.

For the accused persons five different attorneys will appear. Mrs. Mohr has planned a separate defence. She denies all knowledge of or connection with the murder, and will present this denial with corroborative evidence as her defence. Her attorneys are able and distinguished. John J. Fitzgerald, her chief counsel, is second to none in Rhode Island as a criminal lawyer. Arthur Cushing, her personal counsel, will assist Mr. Fitzgerald, and members of his office staff will be enlisted for detail work during the trial.

George W. Healis, the chauffeur, is likewise to present a separate defence. It has been said he would turn State's evidence, and his attorney, Adolph Gorman, has been in close touch with the attorneys for the State during the preliminary work.

Because of the expectation that Healis will adopt this course there has been an open break between him and the other two negroes. A week ago when the attorneys for the other negroes went to Cranston to consult with their clients, they asked permission to talk with Healis. The prison authorities were willing, but Healis refused to see them or to discuss the case in any way.

Henry Spellman and Cecil Victor Brown are half-brothers; they are the persons whom the State accuses of having fired the shots that killed the doctor and wounded Miss Burger, and their defence will be conducted separately.

Their attorney, appointed by the Rhode Island court, is John B. Edwards, a colored man. They desired that William H. Lewis of Boston, formerly assistant United States district attorney, be assigned to conduct their case, but because he was not a Providence man, the court declined.

Mr. Lewis, however, will be associated with Mr. Edwards in the case, regardless of compensation, according to Mr. Edwards. Mr. Lewis has taken an active part in the preparation of evidence.

During the trial, the three negroes will be in custody, as they have failed to provide the bail demanded of them. Mrs. Mohr, however, has been freed on $20,000 bail, and it is expected she will continue free during the trial and will come and go with her friends and attorneys for the daily session of the court.

The trend of events that culminated in the murder of Dr. Mohr, for which his wife and the negroes are now to face trial, began many years ago. Mrs. Mohr is about 31 years old. She was born in Norwich, Ct. Her family moved to Taunton soon after her birth. The family lived in the "Weir Village" end of Taunton. The elder Blair—for Mrs. Mohr's maiden name was Elizabeth Tiffany Blair—was moderately prosperous, and it was not from need but from choice that "Betty" Blair in her middle 'teens decided to go to work.

She worked in a number of Taunton stores; then went to Providence to attend school there, and after a time went to work in O'Gorman's dry goods store on Westminster street. A girl named Anna Spencer was her chum at that time. It was here her life path was to cross that of the man she later married.

Dr. Mohr was born in McEwensville, Pa. He attended Johns Hopkins, went into practice in Baltimore, and there married Josephine Hastry. Of that first union two children were born. Both are still living.

There is evidence that Dr. Mohr and his first wife were not happy together. In 1897 he sued Dr. William Stevens of New York on a charge of alienation of his wife's affections. It was four years later that he first came to Rhode Island. He first tried to establish a practice in Newport, failed, went to Providence and there was to prosper greatly.

Up to that time his marriage to his first wife had not been dissolved. Charles Manning Mohr, son of that first union, has said:

"My mother obtained a divorce from my father ten years ago because of the woman who is now accused of his murder."

Shortly after securing this divorce Dr. Mohr's first wife died.

CROSSING OF PATHS.

Dr. Mohr, while still bound to his first wife, met "Betty" Blair. Their preliminary acquaintance lasted, according to several different witnesses, about a year. Concerning their marriage, both as to its date and as to the attendant circumstances, there is some mystery. Testimony as to this marriage is expected to figure prominently in the approaching trial. Th t Mrs. Mohr's family opposed it seems clear; but it is also clear that Dr. Mohr awoke in her a mad, unthinking devotion which carried her to his side in spite of all opposition. It was this very blind love, the State will claim, that later led, through jealousy, to her plot for her husband's death.

The early married life of Dr. Mohr and his second wife was happy, though clouded by occasional fiery conflicts which had their origin in her jealousy and in other causes. Dr. Mohr has been described as a man cold and hard as steel, but capable of exciting the most unreasoning interest in most women with whom he came in contact. Coupled with this capability was the fact that in his determination to acquire wealth Dr. Mohr turned to a questionable practice. The two circumstances gave reason enough, there is no doubt, for Mrs. Mohr's jealousy of her husband's relations with other women.

Two children came to Dr. Mohr and his second wife. Of these C. Franklin Mohr, Jr., is now about ten years old, while Virginia Blair Mohr, the daughter, is three years younger.

FIRST SERIOUS BREAK.

By 1905 Dr. Mohr was becoming prosperous. In 1908, he bought a modest little house in Newport. In 1909, so far as public record goes, came the first serious break between Dr. Mohr and his wife. She says:

"Early in 1909, the doctor struck me, without warning, while we were at dinner and gave me a terrible beating. I had to go to a sanitarium. In June, 1909, the day after my mother died, the doctor gave me another beating because I remained at my mother's bedside instead of keeping an appointment with him."

One of their early quarrels was over his property. At their marriage, Mrs. Mohr says, he placed it in her name. Later he demanded that she return the title to him, and threatened her with death until she surrendered.

The last trace of the old tenderness between them was at Christmas, 1911, when Dr. Mohr bought his big estate, "Montpelier" at Newport, "as a Christmas present for his wife." The brief era of good feeling that followed soon gave way, however, to the old bitterness many times intensified.

From Christmas, 1911, until May of 1915, Dr. Mohr appears to have plunged into affairs with other women, the result being increasing anger on the part of Mrs. Mohr. Emily Burger, who was seriously wounded at the time the doctor was killed, was one of the doctor's friends.' She and her relatives assert that their relations were not beyond the bounds, but it is certain that toward Emily Burger Mrs. Mohr entertained a violent hatred.

Early in 1914 Mrs. Mohr separated from her husband. A few weeks later, in February of that year, an incident occurred, as a result of which a servant girl sued Dr. Mohr on a serious charge. It was asserted at the trial of that suit that Mrs. Mohr had prompted the girl to "lure the doctor into attacking her"; and Dr. Mohr won a verdict in the suit.

Emily Burger was in the doctor's employ for a considerable period. In March, 1915, because of Mrs. Mohr's utterances and threats against her, she left the position with the doctor. It was not until a few days before his murder that she again accepted a post he offered her, and that was only temporary.

In May, 1915, the State will claim, Mrs. Mohr began to consider the death of the doctor; and the State will assert that in that month Mrs. Mohr gave Cecil Victor Brown money with which to buy the motorcycle he rode on the night—according to his confession to the police—he shot the doctor.

From May, 1915, till the date of the doctor's murder, Mrs. Mohr appears to have kept close watch on him through the agency of servants and others. The facts revealed to her by this espionage served only to increase her anger at her husband. During this period Florence Ormsby played a prominent part in the unfolding drama. She was in the doctor's employ; yet she says Mrs. Mohr tried to induce her to betray the doctor's secrets, and that while pretending to do so she was really loyal to the doctor all the time.

STATE THEORY OF PLOT.

About August, 1915, according to the story of one man, Mrs. Mohr went to the little town of Newburg, N. Y., and frankly attempted to enlist his services to "do away with" Dr. Mohr. This man may be a witness at the trial. He says Mrs. Mohr told him her name, and told him the name of her husband and the nature of his practice.

At that time, according to the stories told by the negroes now accused of the murder, Mrs. Mohr was urging them to kill the doctor, and they were reluctant and were putting her off, so that they say she grew impatient.

On August 26, 1915, in the absence of the housekeeper of his Newport home, Dr. Mohr engaged Emily Burger to take her place. Florence Ormsby has said:

"Dr. Mohr told me to tell Mrs. Mohr this and see how she took it. She was furious. She flew into a rage."

Five days later, on the night of August 31, Dr. Mohr was murdered.

The State has gathered a multitude of evidence covering the ten days before the murder, which the State attorneys claim point to Mrs. Mohr as the inspiration of the crime.

One important bit of evidence is a letter written by Mrs. Mohr to George W. Rooke, a brother-in-law of Miss Burger. It has been acknowledged by Mrs. Mohr as having been written by her. It reads:

"Dear Mr. Rooke—

"Just a line to ask you to tell your sister-in-law, Emily Burger, if she dares to go into my Newport home, she will never come out alive, I am giving her fair warning. No matter what the outcome may be, I will see it through.

"I was told about her buying linen at Gladding's for Dr. Mohr. I do hope you will try and straighten matters, and I know you can't stop her from going to dinner with him, but she will have a sad ending if she keeps on aggravating me.

"The world is with me in my sorrow. I am heartbroken."

"Respectfully
"ELIZABETH T. MOHR."

George W. Healis has said that the original plan was to kill the doctor on the night of August 28, but that because he had other passengers in his car besides the doctor and Emily Burger, he sped past the appointed spot and the tragedy was deferred.

Florence Ormsby says that on that day or the next, Mrs. Mohr called her by telephone and warned her not to hide with the doctor in his automobile again. Dr. Mohr was accustomed to go down to Newport by automobile every few nights, and often took Miss Ormsby and Miss Burger for part of the way, for the ride.

On the day before the murder, according to the confessions of the three negroes to the police, the final arrangements were made. Each was promised his price by Mrs. Mohr. Healis, for stopping the car in the appointed spot, was to receive $2,000. Brown, for shooting and killing the doctor, was to get an equal sum; while Spellman, whose part it was to "disfigure" Miss Burger, was promised $500, according to these confessions.

On the appointed night, Dr. Mohr invited Miss Ormsby to ride with him. Because her coat was at home and the night was chilly, she refused. Miss Burger and the doctor set out for Newport in the automobile together. Healis was driving.

At a lonely point on the Barrington road, Healis stopped the car. He got out and appeared to tinker with the engine. A moment later a succession of shots rang out. Dr. Mohr and Miss Burger were both struck.

Dr. Mohr never recovered consciousness. He and Miss Burger were hurried to the Rhode Island Hospital, and there, next morning, he died. Miss Burger was desperately wounded, and for a long time a relapse would have been so dangerous that she was not even told of Dr. Mohr's death. When at length the news was broken to her, she did collapse, but subsequently recovered, and is today practically in her usual good health.

PROMPT ARRESTS.

One of the interesting questions to be solved in the case is whether the intent was to kill Miss Burger, or only to injure and disfigure her. According to her sister, she will not be disfigured, and will bear only a slight scar on her neck.

Within a few minutes after the arrival at the hospital, Healis was taken in custody by the police as a witness. What he told them led them a few hours later to send for Brown and Spellman, and after questioning the three, the police say, confessions were secured.

As a result of these confessions, Mrs. Mohr was brought to the police station to confront the negroes, and subsequently all four were placed under arrest. Their indictments on murder charges followed. Bail was assigned to each, and Mrs. Mohr furnished bail and has been at liberty since her arrest, but the negroes have spent the time in jail.

Besides preparations for the murder trial, Mrs. Mohr's time has been to some extent occupied with legal steps toward securing her husband's estate; but the disposition of Dr. Mohr's property will not be finally decided until after the responsibility for his death has been established.

$15 down and the balance in convenient monthly payments—that is our offer now for this wonderful instrument. No other player-piano can equal The Pianola—no matter what its price, nor the honor of its name. The Pianola was the first, and is basically the most perfect, of all players. Its exclusive expression devices give it a musical superiority that no other instrument may achieve.

The Automatic Sustaining Pedal secures a richness of tone such as only master pianists may equal.

The Thermodist makes the melody sing clearly above the accompaniment.

The Metrostyle guides you to a perfect interpretation, imparts the brightness, the sentiment, suggests the rush and hurry, the slow, measured beat, or the swinging "moderato"—just the tempo that the spirit of the music demands.

The Pianola may be had in Steinway, Weber, Steck and Stroud models. It is on sale in Boston only at Steinert Hall

PEASLEE REUNION AT HOME

Turkey Dinner at Henniker Marks Return of Man Cleared of Slaying.

Henniker, N. H., Jan. 8.—Morrison H. Peaslee came home this afternoon a free man, and his acquittal by the jury at Concord of the charge of murder of his father, Howard Peaslee, was followed by a joyous outpouring of his friends here to add their note of gladness to the happiness of the Peaslee family circle.

The home-coming was a big event in the village, and there was a deluge of felicitations as young Peaslee, his wife, their children and the young man's mother stepped from the train which brought them from Concord.

Tomorrow the family will have a reunion and there will be a turkey for dinner. Young Peaslee's joy could be seen in his face today, and shortly before he left Concord he said to the reporters who have been covering his trial:

"Here I stand, the happiest man in the world."

Pointing to his wife, he added.

"And there stands the pluckiest girl. I guess she is the happiest girl in the world, too."

And at that the young wife smiled her perfect happiness.

PEASLEE OVERJOYED.

Asked what were his plans for the future, Peaslee said:

"I don't know what I shall do about living in Henniker. Of course there isn't a reason in the world now why I shouldn't remain there. Nevertheless, this affair has changed things.

"I haven't an idea about my plans for the future. I'm just thinking about happiness at this moment. Nothing else has entered my head.

"When I heard those two crisp words, 'Not Guilty,' I nearly collapsed. Everything went from me. Then I realized I was a free man and you can bet I made use of that knowledge.

"To my faithful friends I wish to express my heartfelt thanks for their loyalty. It has meant much to me during the dark days, and I've had many.

"To my attorneys who fought so ably for my life, I can't find words to express my feelings. They understand the[illegible]

WIFE IS PLEASED.

"Just in closing a word of advice to the young fellows wouldn't go amiss. Always keep straight. Be on the level with yourself. Things are bound to come out right in the end, no matter how black they look at times."

Mrs. Peaslee, the young wife who staunchly stood by her husband through the long trial, was almost hysterical with joy when the news of the verdict was given her early today. A throng of about 500 persons who had remained in and about the courtroom all night burst into tumultuous applause when the words "Not guilty!" were uttered by the foreman of the jury.

At 1:05 a. m. Judge Branch, who had gone to the Eagle Hotel, was called by the jury for instructions. He was summoned by Deputy Sheriff Arthur Clarke. He arrived at the court house in a few moments. At 1:58 the jury filed in. Morrison had been summoned from the jail, where he had gone at midnight. He was accompanied by two deputy sheriffs.

He looked as though he were on the verge of a breakdown. His counsel, however, talked with him and kept him busily engaged in conversation.

As the jury took their seats Judge [illegible] this paper [illegible] understand [illegible] is this [illegible] Judge [illegible] charge to the jury [illegible] of Morrison Peaslee would [illegible] thrown out and [illegible] about the testimony of Co[illegible] Murchie. "Am I right?" [illegible] Judge Branch. Foreman Walter [illegible] replied, "Yes, that is the [illegible]"

Judge Branch [illegible] a moment and then [illegible] answer: "gentlemen, [illegible] I tell you in the charge that [illegible] of the county solicitor was the only thing that kept the confession in. I said that if the statement of the respondent, Morrison H. Peaslee, that the confession had been obtained by threat and had not been contradicted, that the confession would have been worthless and would not stand."

RUSH FOR COURTROOM

The judge then said: "Have I made the point clear?" [illegible] Darrah replied, "You have."

They then returned to the jury room. That was at 2:10 a. m. Sixteen minutes later they returned with the verdict, which sent Peaslee away from the court house a free man.

When the word was passed about that a verdict was reached everyone rushed for seats in the courtroom. Some had been sleeping in the spectators' benches, some more bold had rolled their coats into pillows and slept on the press table. When court was called to order at 2:25 a. m. there were over 200 persons in the room.

Judge Branch took his seat at the bench at about 2:20. As the jury became seated Judge Branch polled the jurors in the absence of Clerk George Fletcher. He then turned to Foreman Walter E. Darrah and said:

"What say you, Mr. Foreman and gentlemen, have you arrived at a verdict?"

"We have," replied Foreman Darrah.

"Do you find the respondent Morrison H. Peaslee guilty or not guilty?"

"Not guilty," replied Foreman Darrah in a quiet [illegible]

A wild cheer broke the awful silence. Peaslee caught sight of the handcuffs which have kept him in bondage every day and said, "I'll never see these things again. That's the last pair I shall ever look at."

Tears, the first that had made their appearance during the trial, were visible. Flanked on both sides by devoted friends he thanked them one and all for their loyal support and kindness to him and his family during the trial. Earlier in the evening after the jury had been charged by the judge, he joined his wife and brother in the ante-room, just outside the court room. Affectionate greetings were exchanged between wife, husband, mother and son.

Mrs. Peaslee broke down at the thought of separation. She held his hand, pressing it assuringly. She and her husband sat together until nearly midnight. At the suggestion of his counsel, Mrs. Peaslee then decided to go to her temporary quarters on Warren street.

"WE PUT UP GOOD FIGHT."

It was a pathetic parting. Peaslee was shackled to Sheriff Smith and led to the automobile which conveyed him to the county jail, a mile away, where he sat alone in his darkened cell to await the verdict.

Mrs. Peaslee when seen at her home said: "Oh, how good this is. Can it be true? I knew it would have to be this way. My Morrison and I will go somewhere now with the babies for a rest. What my future plans are I can't state just now. I'm so happy, really, I can't talk to you. Just say that I'm the happiest woman in this wide, wide world. That will cover it."

At the close of the trial both Attorneys Martin and Hill were congratulated by the throng which pressed about them. County Solicitor "Bob" Murchie, who presented the case for the prosecution, sat alone at his table when the verdict was announced.

As the verdict was presented he arose and with his usual smile and courteous manner, which has characterized his fight during the trial, said: "Oh, well, it's all in the game; we put up an awful good fight, you'll have to admit." He then lit up a cigar and walked out of the courtroom. Attorney-General James P. Tuttle was not present when the verdict was pronounced.

Morrison Peaslee and His Little Daughter

Peaslee, overjoyed at acquittal on slaying charge, will have reunion dinner with his family at Henniker today.

District Attorney Acts on Conspiracy Charges and Calls on Finance Board for Testimony

District Attorney Joseph C. Pelletier yesterday made his first move in the proposed Grand Jury investigation of the charges of conspiracy in the Tylose investigation, when he sent a [illegible] to Chairman John F. Murphy of the Finance Commission requesting the evidence and testimony taken by the Finance Commission at a private hearing.

The letter was sent before the city prosecutor went to New York and was received at the office of the commission yesterday afternoon. It [illegible] at the meeting tomorrow [illegible] when it is believed [illegible] commission will comply with [illegible] request of the district attorney.

[illegible] of the commission [illegible] of the opinion that [illegible] with the district at[illegible]

[illegible] from the district [illegible] was sent as a result of a visit of Attorney Daniel H. Coakley, representing Walter J. Grosvenor and Edward [illegible] partners in the Tylose Contracting Company, to the [illegible] Friday afternoon, when Mr. Coakley charged a member of the Finance [illegible] and some of the agents [illegible] conspiracy and several witnesses with perjury.

Attorney Coakley appeared with Mr. Grosvenor and several witnesses. After a consultation with the district attorney it was arranged by Mr. Pelletier that he would make an examination of the evidence and present the case to the Grand Jury.

The Grand Jury reported yesterday to the Superior Court and was dismissed until [illegible]

District Attorney Pelletier [illegible] return [illegible] next Wednesday when he will receive the answer of the Finance Commission.

For several weeks the Finance Commission [illegible] the purchase of Tylose by the city. At the completion of the evidence Friday, Attorney Coakley refused to introduce any evidence in defence of his clients, saying:

"We will not offer any testimony because my clients, or one of my clients, feels that the attitude of Commissioner Carr, of Guy Emerson (consulting engineer of the Finance Commission) and of Mr. Dowling (secretary [illegible]) [illegible] can be [illegible] I ought to say [illegible] the entire commission. [illegible] we are to present our testimony to another tribunal, we will offer nothing here."

Mr. Coakley then visited the Court House and made his charges.

This is the first time since the organization of the Finance Commission that any member or employe has been the subject of Grand Jury investigation.

The Tylose partners claim the investigation of the floor preservatives sold the city was instigated by the Finance Commission for the purpose of ascertaining if there was any graft on the part of the purchaser, but that since then it has developed into a move to injure the Tylose Company and its owners.

OFFER BILL TO HELP ENFORCE GAME LAW

The passage of an act to provide a fine of $100 and imprisonment of one year for any person convicted of assaulting an officer enforcing the fish and game laws was recommended to the Legislature yesterday by the State Fish and Game Commission. In its effort to propagate fish, the Commission urges a law imposing a $500 fine and one year imprisonment on any person who throws poisonous substances into a stream or kills fish by the use of dynamite.

HEAVY SHIPMENT OF AUTOS FOR LONDON

The British steamer St. Cecelia sailed from this port yesterday for London with the largest shipment of auto trucks sent out of Boston since the outbreak of the war. With the sailing of the Industry last Friday and the St. Cecelia today much of the congestion at the New Haven docks has been relieved. The two ships, which are Cunarders, took 10,000 tons of freight away.

FOR A BAD COUGH

Here is a fine old-fashioned recipe for coughs, colds or catarrh trouble that has been used for many years with great success. Get from your druggist 1 oz. of Parmint (Double Strength) and add to it ¼ pint of hot water and 4 oz. of granulated sugar. Take one tablespoonful 4 times a day.

No more racking your whole body with a cough. Clogged nostrils should open, air passages of your head clear up so you can breathe freely. It is easy to prepare, costs little and is pleasant to take. Anyone who has a stubborn cough, or hard cold or catarrh in any form should give this prescription a trial.—Advertisement.

TURN HAIR DARK WITH SAGE TEA

If Mixed with Sulphur It Darkens Gray Hair So Naturally Nobody Can Tell

The old-time mixture of Sage and Sulphur for darkening gray streaked and faded hair is [illegible] mother's treatment, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is [illegible] sensible, as we are living in [illegible] when a youthful appearance is [illegible] greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't [illegible] the troublesome task of gathering sage and the mussy mixing at [illegible] All drug stores sell the [illegible] product called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" for about [illegible] a bottle. It is very popular [illegible] nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive; besides, prevents dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair.—Advertisement.

MR. CONRY'S ADDRESS.

[illegible] These three countries were [illegible] the greatest [illegible] producers [illegible] the whole world.

"In 1880 the population and the foreign trade of Germany and the United States were represented by about the [illegible] figures [illegible] foreign trade of $1,430,000,000, while the United States had a population of 50 millions with a foreign trade of $1,[illegible]. Thirty years later, in 1910, the population of Germany had grown to sixty-five millions and its trade was very close to four billions of dollars, while the population of the United States had increased from fifty to ninety millions and its foreign trade had increased to only $3,300,000,000.

"While our population had increased 80 per cent its foreign trade per capita had increased only 15 per cent while Germany with 30 per cent increase of population had increased her foreign trade 1[illegible]0 per cent per capita.

"Great Britain is the only country which is a larger factor in international trade than Germany. Great Britain has always enthusiastically supported the theory of Sir Walter [illegible] that whoever commanded the sea commanded the trade of the world, and whoever commanded the trade of the world commanded the riches of the world. [illegible] aggressive sea power policy on the part of Great Britain [illegible] the foundations of her present financial and commercial supremacy.

INTEREST NEEDED.

"This foreign trade [illegible] world, particularly as it affects the United States, is only beginning to interest the vast body of American people. As I have stated [illegible] the total foreign trade of the United States was $4,20[illegible] and [illegible] the close of the [illegible] will rise to the enormous figures of $5,[illegible], the largest ever heard of in the history of the United States.

"The great power of the future is the Russian empire. Her area is eight [illegible] square miles of land, two and a half times the area of the United States [illegible] land under [illegible] States [illegible] and still [illegible] left for generations yet [illegible]

IF BACK HURTS TAKE SALTS TO FLUSH KIDNEYS

Says Backache is sure sign you have been eating too much meat.

Uric Acid in meat clogs Kidneys and irritates the bladder.

[illegible] forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally [illegible] we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

[illegible] keep your kidneys [illegible] clean and the moment you [illegible] ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless, inexpensive, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.—Advertisement.

Judge Irwin Says Marriage Is Best Thing for All Men

Philosopher-Justice of the Superior Court Finds Most Criminals Before Him Are Single.

Judge Irwin of the Superior Court—a good philosopher as he is a good judge—jogged the bachelors of the State with his advice from the bench the other day that marriage was a good thing for a man—the very best thing he could do.

It used to be a case of "Go West, young man."

Judge Irwin says:

"Get married, young man."

And last night to a Sunday AMERICAN reporter he amplified his advice from the bench, declaring that ALL men should marry.

And he added that:

They should marry by the time they are twenty-five years old.

Single men commit the most crimes in Massachusetts.

A married man rarely gets into trouble.

Whenever a man "finds" himself—knows where he stands and what he is doing—he should marry.

The habitual criminal is always a single man.

Marriage makes a man feel his responsibility and tends to keep him in the straight and narrow path of duty.

Single men make up the majority of the criminals of the world.

"I always tell the men that are brought up before me that are single that they should get married," said Judge Irwin. "If they were married, they would not be in court."

Judge Irwin's home is at Northampton [illegible] of schools for girls, and Smith College might be called his next door neighbor. Thus it is that the kindly jurist's good advice to the single men will be hailed with delight in his home district where the women outnumber the men forty (or more) to one. It will also bring joy to those charming young women who hailed this present Leap Year as a sort of rainbow of hope that their backward suitors would soon gain courage, and if not—well, this is Leap Year with the message that such a year always carries.

But Judge Irwin's advice comes from a judge who is also a philosopher, and it is based on his twenty years' experience as a justice in Massachusetts courts. Therefore it merits the attention of married and unmarried alike.

It is good, sound advice.

FIGURES IN SUPPORT.

"I think that all men should marry," said Judge Irwin. "In twenty years on the bench in this State I have found that the larger percentage of the men brought before it are single. If they were married they would never be there.

"Married men I have found do not commit crimes. It is the single man who is brought before the courts. A single man has nobody depending on him and after he is caught once he remains in the game and says to himself 'nobody cares for me and there is no one to suffer for my wrongdoings,' and then he goes from bad to worse.

"[illegible] most of the criminals in Massachusetts are single men between the ages of 25 and 40, many of them under 25, but I do not think that a man finds himself much before the age of 25. A boy hunts around for some years before he finds himself, and he is usually about 25 before he really knows what he is doing. When he finds himself he should marry.

MOST CRIMINALS SINGLE.

"The habitual criminal, the so-called 'bad man' doesn't commit his crimes in his home town. He is [illegible] always single. If all young men should marry the world would be better off. A married man is the more dependable and the man whom I would choose for any good position. He has responsibility on his shoulders, and he works and strives to get ahead and support his wife and his children, if he has any.

"I am slow to send men to prison. I usually give them all the chances in the world, and then—if they still insist on breaking the laws—I send them to prison. I think in the 20 odd years I have been a judge I have sent fewer men to prison than any other [illegible] have been single. I [illegible] ever kept a record of them, but I suppose that interesting statistics could be gotten up on this subject.

CASE IN POINT.

"I always tell men brought before me if they are single that they should marry.

"[illegible] is out of [illegible] as far as real crime is concerned, but if [illegible] interested enough to get criminal statistics he would find that single men are by the largest percentage the criminals of this, and I will even say any country in the world.

"A man I was sent[illegible] term in prison, the other day is a typical example of the single man. He had deserted from the United States army. He served a year for that offence, in a Federal prison, [illegible] committing crimes since he was seven years old. Now, at about [illegible] or so, he was before me for [illegible].

"Several years ago, when he was a young man, I had let him off, when he had been called before me on a criminal charge, and told him that he should pick out a wife and settle down. He came before me this week and after looking at his record, which by now is very long, I told him again, this time to show him where my [illegible] might have saved him from prison, [illegible] sentence I was about to give him that if he had married he would never be before me.

"I had to send him to prison, for he had had many chances. I hate to send any man to prison, but you have to do it and in this case it was the only resort.

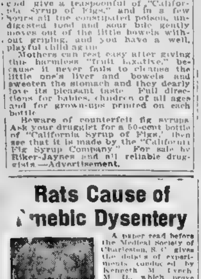
"It is from experience that I say that all men should marry. A judge sees things as they are, and people as they are. That is why I have come to the conclusion that all men should marry. I do not believe they should marry young, but only when they reach an age of discretion.

"I try cases all over the State and I find that in every city and town in this whole wide State the single men are the ones who commit crime."

YOUR SICK CHILD IS CONSTIPATED! LOOK AT TONGUE

Hurry, Mother! Remove poisons from little stomach, liver, bowels.

Give "California Syrup of Figs" if cross, bilious or feverish.



No matter what ails your child, a gentle, thorough laxative should always be the first treatment given.

If your little one is out of sorts, half-sick, isn't resting, eating and acting naturally—look, Mother! see if tongue is coated. This is a sure sign that the little stomach, liver and bowels are clogged with waste. When cross, irritable, feverish, stomach sour, breath bad or has stomach-ache, diarrhoea, sore throat, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the constipated poison, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of the little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

Mothers can rest easy after giving this harmless "fruit laxative," because it never fails to cleanse the little one's liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach and they dearly love its pleasant taste. Full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups printed on each bottle.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," then see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." For sale by Riker-Jaynes and all reliable druggists.—Advertisement.

Rats Cause of Amebic Dysentery

A paper read before the Medical Society of Charleston, S. C. gives the details of experiments conducted by Kenneth M. Lynch, M. D., which prove that rats are carriers of amebic dysentery.

In order to prove his theories Dr. Lynch fed 20 rats on matter containing germs of amebic dysentery. They soon developed the disease.

Healthy rats were then placed in with the treated rats and they, too, developed the disease. Showing that they contracted it by feeding upon infected matter.

Cases of amebic dysentery were traced to sections of Charleston where the sanitary arrangements were not right and rats had access to infected matter. Rats captured in this section and examined were found to have the disease.

These experiments simply show that the rat is a carrier of diseases other than bubonic plague. I haven't the slightest doubt that further studies with rats along these lines will show that they are responsible for the spread of a number of diseases that they have never been suspected of.

It is better to be prepared to resist the insidious attacks of these dangerous pests than to rest in fancied security. The first step in preparedness is extermination. Exterminate the rats and a lot of troubles have been avoided. To do this quickly and economically use "Martin's" Rat Powders. They are clean, odorless and sure. Sold by drug and department stores everywhere for 50c and $1.00. 65c and $1.10 by mail. Eleven different powders for other pests. Name kind when ordering.

BOY'S HEROISM MAY PUT END TO POLITICAL FEUD

Son of Street Commissioner Goodwin Saves the Life of Representative Giblin's Boy.

Through the heroism of a fifteen-year-old boy the long-standing family political feud between Street Commissioner Frank A. Goodwin and Representative Thomas J. Giblin, both of East Boston, verges on a peaceful settlement.

The boy is Carl Goodwin, son of the Commissioner. His heroism was exemplified in his rescue from drowning of Edmund Giblin, ten, the son of the Representative.

The rescue took place on the Orient Heights playground while the two boys, with others, were playing hockey.

"We didn't know each other at all until after it was all over," said Young Goodwin later. "It was then I first knew I had saved Giblin's son.

"I didn't think of myself at all while doing it. I just did what any other fellow would do. I guess Tirrell is entitled to most of the credit, anyway."

Young Goodwin's father, who has a libel suit against Giblin pending, was much pleased with his son's heroism.

"If Giblin comes around I'll certainly shake his hand," he said.

Harvard Men Hang an Effigy from Window

Harvard undergraduates were surprised, on walking through the yard yesterday afternoon, to discover a weird figure dancing outside Wadsworth House.

Closer inspection showed the effigy was hanging from a pole at a window in room 5. It wore a black hat, a collar and tie, a black overcoat and somewhat aged light checked trousers. As the dummy swung in the breezes, a sign printed in red ink, was disclosed on its back. The sign bore the inscription "This is Max."

Rooms 5 and 6 are on the first floor, and are occupied by Patrick J. Kirby, 25, of Sioux Falls, North Dakota, and William T. Hutchinson, a junior, of Waterbury, Ct.

BIG BULL MOOSE OFF FOR CHICAGO

New York, Jan. 8.—A small group of leaders of the inner circle of the Progressive party, headed by George W. Perkins and Bainbridge Colby, left New York today for Chicago to meet big Bull Moose from other parts of the country.

Officially, they are going to attend a meeting of the National Committee of the Progressive party, to be held next Tuesday.

Unofficially, the meeting is to be a secret session of the general staff to determine the policy of the party and to devise methods to insure the nomination of Colonel Roosevelt for President on some ticket, preferably the Republican.

WEDS AT SISTER'S SILVER JUBILEE

Miss Florence Souson Becomes Bride at Double Celebration in Malden.

Mr. and Mrs. Mat Josephson of No. 96 Hendry street, Malden, yesterday celebrated their silver wedding. While the celebration was in progress Miss Florence Souson, Mrs. Josephson's younger sister, was married to Benjamin Rubin of Boston. There was a large company of relatives and friends of the two couples present to witness the most unusual event.

The bride, who was born six years after her older sister was married to Mr. Josephson, has lived in London for many years, and it was in that city that she met Mr. Rubin, who was in England on business. Miss Souson came to America a short time ago, braving the terrors of submarine warfare, to join her intended husband.

Mr. and Mrs. Josephson were presented a purse of $250 in silver by their friends and joined the young couple on their honeymoon trip to New York and Washington.

"POETIC" BEGGARS GIVEN SIX MONTHS

Lowell, Jan. 8.—John Belden and Frank J. Connors, who claimed Boston as their home city, were today sentenced to six months each in the House of Correction for begging. When arrested, Belden wore a bandage on one hand and carried a poetic begging card in the other. Dr. M. A. Tighe removed 100 feet of gauze while Belden shrieked. There was no injury apparent to the hand.

MRS. BENJAMIN RUBIN (formerly Miss Florence Souson), married yesterday at her sister's silver wedding celebration in Malden.

URGES NEW LAW FOR HOSPITAL BUILDING

City Solicitor Harvey L. Boutwell of Malden has drawn up a bill for the Legislature to allow cities and towns to club together in groups to build tuberculosis hospitals. The law now compels individual municipalities to provide them. The Malden Finance Commission reported, after an investigation of these hospitals, that in most [illegible] per cent of their expense falls upon the municipality and only [illegible] per cent is received from paying patients; also that the annual maintenance equals the original cost.

BREAK GROUND FO TEMPLE OF ISRAE

Mayor Curley and Other Officia to Attend Exercises Today in Dorchester.

In the presence of Mayor Curley a other officials, ground will be brok this afternoon for the temple of t Congregation Mish[illegible] to be built on Westville street, Dorchester, near Geneva avenue. Afte the turning of the sod the exercise will be transferred to the Marshal school on Westville street. Ther will be addresses by Mayor Curley, Judge A. K. Cohen, Rabbi Henry Lev of the Temple Israel, Commonwealth avenue, Dr. M. M. Eichler of Temple Ohabei Shalom; Dr. H. H. Rubinovitz of Temple Mishkan Tefilah, Copeland and Moreland streets, Roxbury; Rabbi P. Israel of Temple Adath Jeshurun, Blue Hill avenue, and Leon R. Eyges, former Assistant Attorney-General of Massachusetts.

Founded originally as the Dorchester Talmud Torah, twelve years ago services have been held in various halls. Last Fall sufficient funds were on hand to warrant the building of the temple which will be dedicated in the Spring, free of debt. The Ladies' Auxiliary, under the direction of Mrs. Sol Cohen, president of the society, has raised large sums of money to carry out the plan to build.

The building committee which had charge of the raising of funds for the new synagogue is composed of H. Murray Pakulski, N. Isaacson and Albert K. Sheldon.

HARVARD DRILL OPENS TOMORROW

Captain Cordier to Begin Work With Two of the 8 Companies of the Regiment.

Captain Constant Cordier, in charge of the Harvard Regiment, has divided his charges into eight companies and will start actual drill tomorrow night in the baseball cage. Companies A and B will share the drill time tomorrow and Companies C and D on Tuesday evening. Wednesday night has been assigned to E and F, Thursday afternoon to G and Thursday evening to H. The officers for the companies have also been assigned but not in ranking order. Friday evening will be devoted to improving their military knowledge.

Names of some of the most prominent athletes are missing from the regimental roll. "Bill" Bingham, first marshal of the senior class, does not approve of drill in college and although chosen a member of the preparedness committee without his knowledge, subsequently resigned. Captain Mahan of the football team, Captain-elect Gilman, Captain Nash of the nine and the two Morgan boys, leaders of the hockey and crew respectively, are not registered. Neither are Soucy, Boles, Parson, King and other athletic stars.

Rev. Alexander Dixon Dead.

Newburyport, Jan. 8.—The Rev. Alexander Dixon, a missionary worker for more than a quarter of a century, died at his home after a lingering illness.

OVER-FATNESS KILLS

Wonderful Success of a New York Physician's Treatment.

It is now admitted by the leading medical experts that corpulency (obesity) may shorten life. Probably most over-stout persons die ten to forty years too soon.

Their fatness may induce ailments of several kinds, principally fatty degeneration of the heart, kidney and liver trouble, chronic dyspepsia or other stomach disorder, rheumatism, gout and other serious diseases which become complicated by the pressure of fat around the vital organs.

There is also the danger of appendicitis, sunstroke, heat prostration, apoplexy, vertigo, and other attacks, which may cause sudden death or lead to softening of the brain.

Fat people are seldom really well, they do not know how to enjoy good health because they do not possess it.

Fat women are never good looking. They lose their figure, acquire double-chin, wrinkles, disorders of the female organism and general debility.

There is no need of despair, however, because Dr. Brough has a perfected method of reducing the weight. In many cases the fat man or woman can REDUCE ONE POUND DAILY.

No inconvenient or torturing means of shortening sleep, going without agreeable food or drink, or violent exercise. Neither are dangerous drugs given. In fact, Dr. Brough's treatment is the ideal. It is voluntarily recommended by a legion of persons who have taken it, proved its true worth and who cheerfully endorse this wonderful treatment.

This treatment for obesity not only gets rid of the fat speedily and perfectly, but brings a good figure, facial beauty, brightness of eyes, and imparts those powers of personal magnetism which enable one to succeed in social and business life. BOSTON MEN TO LAUNCH 'NAVAL PLATTSBURG'

Move Under Way to Interest Business Men in New Branch of Preparedness.

[illegible] patterned after the [illegible] camp held for business men at Plattsburg, N. Y., last summer and which will probably be known as the "Naval Plattsburg," w[illegible] [illegible] committee for the [illegible] camp, and all three of its members are prominent Boston men.

The object of the camp is to interest business men who own boats or who are more interested in the navy [illegible] into drilling for a month next summer under the direction of naval officers at the Rhode Island [illegible] summer resort. John L. Saltonstall, prominent Boston banker, is the [illegible] of the "Naval Plattsburg" committee, and his co-workers are Frederick Winthrop and R. [illegible] Agassiz.

They visited Washington this week at the invitation of Secretary Arthur H. Dadmun of the Navy League of America, where plans were perfected for this naval preparedness camp.

LIQUOR TAXES ARE RAPPED BY PAN-AMERICANS

Scientists Believe Reform Idea Should Come Before the Seeking of Revenue.

By International News Service.

Washington, Jan. 8.—A slap at peace propagandists and strong disapproval of the tax on alcoholic beverages merely as a means of raising revenues featured the final session of the Pan-American Scientific Congress today. The congress voted to adopt a 12,000 word resolution submitted by the executive committee. The principal recommendations in the resolution were:

That the teaching of international law should not be made the occasion for a universal peace propaganda.

That all law schools include in their curriculums the study of international law.

Establishment of an "Intellectual Pan-American Union" to unite technical associations of various characters.

That legislation and jurisprudence in the Americas be made more nearly uniform.

That the American republics be petitioned to further the interchange of professors and students and that Spanish and English be more generally taught.

That taxes on alcoholic beverages be levied with the idea of improving the social and moral order, instead of with the sole idea of raising revenue.

CATARRH TRUTH

Told In a Simple Way

No Apparatus, Inhalers, Salves, Lotions, Harmful Drugs, Smoke or Electricity

Heals Day and Night

It is a new way. It is something absolutely different. No lotions, sprays [illegible]. No atomizer or [illegible]. Nothing to smoke [illegible]. No steaming or rubbing [illegible]. No electricity or vibration or massage. No powder, no plasters, no keeping in the house. Nothing of that kind at all. Something new and different, something delightful and healthful, something instantly successful. You do not have to wait and linger and pay out a lot of money. You can stop it over night—and I will gladly tell you how FREE. I am not a doctor and this is not a so-called doctor's prescription—but I am cured and my friends are cured, and you can be cured. Your suffering will stop at once like magic.

I Am Free—You Can Be Free

My catarrh was filthy and loathsome. It made me ill. [illegible] The hawking [illegible] my breath [illegible] My delight in life was [illegible] and my faculties impaired. I knew that in [illegible] grave, because every [illegible] of the day and night it was slowly yet surely sapping my vitality.

But I found a cure, and I am ready to tell you about it FREE. Write me promptly.

RISK JUST ONE CENT

Send no money. Just your name and address on a postal card. Say: "Dear Sam Katz: Please tell me how you cured your catarrh and how I can cure mine." That's all you need to say. I will understand, and I will write to you with complete information, FREE, at once. Do not delay. [illegible] a letter today. [illegible] what I can do for you.

HEAD STUFFED FROM CATARRH OR A COLD

Says Cream Applied in Nostrils Opens Air Passages Right Up.

Instant relief—no waiting. Your clogged nostrils open right up; the air passages of your head clear and you can breathe freely. No more hawking, snuffling, blowing, headache, dryness. No struggling for breath at night, your cold or catarrh disappears.

Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist now. Apply a little of this fragrant antiseptic, healing cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothes the inflamed or swollen mucous membrane and relief comes instantly.

It's just fine. Don't stay stuffed-up with a cold or nasty catarrh.—Advertisement.

Worcester Basketball Girls Say Men Should Be Allowed at Games

W[illegible]

M[illegible] P[illegible] [illegible] of the [illegible] [illegible] team.

Eunice Duffy, centre of the South High School five.

Ruth Eaton, forward on the North High School team.

Worcester, Jan. 8.—[illegible] over [illegible] spectators [illegible] from high school girls' basketball games came right down to [illegible] language today.

Dr. P. J. Carney, one of [illegible] members of the School [illegible] committee on health [illegible] which issued the order [illegible].

Last year a number of [illegible] boys from outside attended the [illegible] and it was our understanding [illegible] they went merely for the [illegible] staring at the girls in [illegible].

But Miss Mary Power, captain of last year's Classical High team and [illegible] member of this year's [illegible] team, said:

"The girl's costumes are sensible [illegible] sufficiently modest."

Miss Power adds that [illegible] costumes are far more [illegible] than the basketball rigs.

Petitions against the ruling signed by pupils, teachers and parents, are now before the School Committee. The girls and their supporters declare confidently that [illegible] will overrule the [illegible].

ORDER A SURPRISE

The trouble started just about the time the girls were [illegible] opening of the season. [illegible] ball has for years been one of the chief sports in the Worcester High schools, with some of the teams nearly always well up to the girls' championship of the State. Big crowds have invariably [illegible] and gate receipts have [illegible] been enough to pay expenses [illegible] something [illegible] balance over at the end of the year.

This year the high schools mustered unusually strong material for the girls' basketball teams, including such clever players as Edith P[illegible], star forward on the South High [illegible] Duffy, centre on the South team, Ruth Eaton, forward [illegible] the North High Girls team [illegible].

Toward the end of November the girls were [illegible] best year ever [illegible] schools was strong [illegible] that were [illegible] quent games. Then [illegible] committee edict that men and boys were not to be allowed at the games.

"But," protested the girls, "it will kill our sport. It's the only real sport we have."

The committee [illegible] to [illegible] of the order [illegible] brothers of [illegible] will be excluded with the rest.

BLOW TO ATHLETICS.

It has put a [illegible] basketball and girls's athletics [illegible]. The girls declare that it is impossible to conduct the game successfully without spectators. "What," they ask, "would [illegible] football if [illegible] support of [illegible] the college [illegible] run [illegible]."

The members of the committee who [illegible] spectators from the games are Dr. George A. Power, Dr. P. J. Carney and Edward W. Wilder. Mr. Wilder is physical director of the Y. M. C. A. Dr. John E. Rice and Louis Bragg, also members of the committee, were in favor of permitting the male spectators. The girls and their friends say that on account of losses of the entire [illegible] for the action [illegible].

Dr. Carney says that spectators other than boy pupils of the high schools were the real reason for the action.

"Last year," he said, "there was attendance from outside which was not considered desirable for the best interests of the schools or of the sport."

Dr. Power said that the action of the committee was in line with that taken in other cities.

"Did you feel," he was asked, "that the costumes worn by the girls were such that men should not be permitted at the games?"

"I would rather not discuss that phase of the matter one way or the other."

Mr. Wilder took the same position [illegible].

Dr. Rice is outspoken in favor of [illegible] male spectators [illegible] nothing about the costumes [illegible] the girls that could be in any way harmful to a man with a normal mind whether he is an outsider or not."

The storm of protest among the girls is increasing instead of diminishing. Miss Power does not mince words in declaring that boys and men should be allowed to see the games.

Wishes to tell you FREE

HOW SHE STOPPED Her Husband's Drinking

Write to Her and Learn How She Did It

For over 20 years James Anderson of 24 Oak Ave., Hi[illegible]burn, N. Y., was a very hard drinker. His case seemed a hopeless one, but [illegible] years ago his wife in their own little home, gave him a simple remedy which much to her delight stopped his drinking entirely.

She also tried this remedy on her brother and several neighbors. It was successful in every case. None of them has touched liquor since.

She now wishes everyone who has drunkenness in their home to try this simple remedy for she feels sure that it will do as much for others as it has for her. It can be given secretly if desired, and without cost she will gladly and willingly tell you what it is. All you have to do is write her a letter asking her how she cured her husband of drinking and she will reply by return mail in a sealed envelope. As she has nothing to sell, do not send her money. Simply send a letter with all confidence to Mrs. Margaret Anderson at the address given above, taking care to write your name and full address plainly.

(We earnestly advise every one of our readers who wishes to cure a dear one of drunkenness to write to this lady today. Her offer is a sincere one.)

BACK PROJECT TO ESTABLISH 'INTER-NATION'

Notable Latin-Americans Address Society to Eliminate Economic Causes of War.

[illegible] annual [illegible] of the Society to [illegible] the Economic Causes of War [illegible] at the Wellesley [illegible] convention [illegible] the resolution [illegible] which was the [illegible] of former [illegible] Senator [illegible] Hoar.

Resolved, that [illegible] society is of the opinion that whatever Pan-American treaty is to be submitted at the present time, be framed by a conference of delegates from all American republics, rather than by any one nation."

The leading topics of discussion [illegible] with this convention [illegible] to the attitude of the [illegible] American governments toward the [illegible] of the Declaration of Independence [illegible] 1915, by representatives of many [illegible] gathered at Philadelphia, [illegible] that when established usage has failed to preserve harmony among the nations, to secure them from assault [illegible] neighbors and to afford [illegible] opportunity to all nations for human [illegible] material development, then it is the duty of the nations to organize a representative inter-nation, with power to make and to enforce international [illegible].

The representatives of American governments who have sent communications to the society endorsing the proposed inter-nation project, include Juan S. Lara of Guatemala and Leon[illegible] President of the Republic [illegible].

"The idea of creating an effective international authority founded in the sovereignty of the state so as to make [illegible] prevail even during a state of war and enforce the written law appeals to me as being very attractive. The rulings of such an authority would not be expected to do anything but to make the war humane and civilized.

"If I am not mistaken this is the [illegible] of such an institution as the inter-nation, and if such is the case the purpose is [illegible] generous for it would be thus favoring the weakest nations which have not the means of commanding respect for their most precious rights whenever the powerful seem to [illegible] that the written codes are no longer in existence.

"From this point of view the adoption of an inter-nation [illegible] [illegible] nations at war would be the most [illegible] guarantee of the freedom of the seas."

The members of the society gathered at the Wellesley Inn yesterday, where a reception was tendered the directors. At 6:30 a complimentary informal dinner was tendered by President Isaac Sprague, this function being followed by a business meeting.

This afternoon's session includes an address by Salvador Martinez de A[illegible] of Mexico and general discussion. The meeting is open to the public.

THIS KIDNEY MEDICINE MAKES FRIENDS EVERYWHERE

About four years ago I had a severe attack of Kidney trouble and Gravel of the Bladder. I was afflicted this way for one year and had severe pains in my back and shooting pains in my bladder; I got so bad that I was not able to work for about two months. I could not rest at night. I would have to get up several times during the night to urinate, and at these times it caused me great pain. I read so much and heard so much of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root I decided to try Swamp-Root; after taking several bottles I was restored to good health and I have not been troubled with my kidneys and bladder since. I cheerfully recommend Swamp-Root to others with kidney and bladder troubles.

Yours respectfully,
F. H. FLEMING.
802 E. 14th St., Pittsburg, Kansas.

Personally appeared before me this 5th day of May, 1915, F. H. Fleming, who subscribed to the above statement and made oath that the same is true in substance and in fact.

JOSEPH KEYS, Justice of the Peace.
In and for the County of Crawford and State of Kansas.

About nine years ago the doctor had given me up, saying I had kidney trouble, enlargement of the liver and stomach trouble; that there was no medicine for me that he knew of that would help me and hearing of Dr Kilmer's Swamp-Root I bought one fifty-cent bottle which did me so much good I bought six one-dollar bottles. After taking this amount of Swamp-Root I was completely cured and have not consulted a physician since and am doing my own work every day. When I feel any of the old symptoms coming on I go back to my old friend Swamp-Root which immediately gives me relief.

Very truly yours,
MRS. J. J. WEIDENTHALER,
Grand Island, Nebr.

Personally appeared before me this 8th day of October, 1915, Mrs. J. J. Weidenthaler, who subscribed to the above statement and made oath that the same is true in substance and in fact.

THEO. P. BOEHM,
Notary Public.

Prove What Swamp-Root Will Do For You

Send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample size bottle. It will convince anyone. You will also receive a booklet of valuable information, telling about the kidneys and bladder. When writing, be sure and mention the Boston Sunday American. Regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

The Man That Might Have Been

By Rupert Hughes

"As President of These Here United States," Said Eric, "I Order You to Set There Side of Your Wife."

IN the tame little town of Hillsdale he seemed the tamest thing of all, Will Rudd—especially appropriate to a kneeling trade, a shoe clerk by election. But he was not so lowly as he looked, though he bent the pregnant hinges to anybody soever that entered the shop, with its ingenious rebus on the sign board.

He not only united the stilted Oxfords or buttoned in the arching insteps of those who sat in the "Ladies' and Misses' Dept.," which was the other side of the double-backed bench, whose obverse was the "Gents' Dept.," but also he took upon the glistening surface of his trousers the muddy soles of merchants, the clay-bronzed brogans of hired men, the cowhide toboggans of teamsters, and the brass-toed, red-kneed boots of little boys ecstatic in the first feel of big leather.

Rudd was a shoe clerk to be trusted. He never revealed to a soul that Miss Clara Lommel wore shoes two sizes too small, and when she bit her lip and blenched with agony as he pried her heel into the protesting dongola he seemed not to notice that she was no Cinderella.

And one day, when it was too late, and Miss Lucy Posnett, whose people lived in the big brick mansard, realized that she had a hole in her stocking, what did Rudd do? Why, he never let on.

Clay Kittredge, Rudd's employer, also valued him, secretly, as a man who brought in customers and sold them goods. But he never mentioned this to his clerk, lest Rudd be tempted to the sin of vanity, and incidentally [illegible] an increase in that salary which had remained the same since he had been promoted from delivery boy.

Kittredge found that Rudd kept his secrets as he kept everybody else's. Professing church member as he was, Rudd earnestly palmed off shopworn stock for fresh invoices, declared that the obsolete Piccadillies which Kittredge had snapped up from a bankrupt sale were worn on all the best feet on Fifth avenue, and blandly substituted "just as good" for advertised wares that Kittredge did not carry.

Besides, when no customer was in the shop he spent his time at the back window doctoring tags as the King of France negotiated the hill—by marking up prices, then marking them down.

But when he took his hat from the peg and set it on his head he put on his private con[illegible]. Whatever else he did, he never lied [illegible] to his own advantage.

[illegible] so everybody in town liked Will [illegible] him. He was treated with the affectionate contempt of an old family servant. But he had his ambitions, and great ones, ambitions that reached past himself into the future of another generation. He felt the thrill that stirs the acorn, fallen into the ground and hidden there, but destined to father an oak. His was the ambition beyond ambition that glorifies the seed in the loam [illegible] ennobles the roots of trees thrusting themselves downward and gripping obscurity in order that trunks and branches, flowers and fruits, pods and cones may flourish aloft.

Eventually old Skinflint Kittredge died, and the son chopped the "Jr." curlicue from the end of his name and began a new regime. The old Kittredge had sought only his own aggrandizement, and his son was his son. The new Clay Kittredge had gone to public school with Rudd, and they continued to be "Clay" and "Will" to each other; no one would ever have [illegible] Rudd by so demonstrative a name as "Bill."

When Clay the second dropped into his father's boots—and shoes—he began to enlarge the business, hoping to efface his fa[illegible] achievements by his own. The shop grad[illegible] expanded to a department store for [illegible] all portions of the anatomy and supplying other parts as well.

Rudd was so overjoyed at not being up[illegible] and flung aside to die that he never observed the shrewd irony of Kittredge's phrase [illegible] may remain, Will, with no reduction of sa[illegible]

To have lost his humble position would [illegible] frustrated his dream, for he was doing hi[illegible] to build for himself and for her a hom[illegible] they could fulfill their destinies. He cher[illegible] no hope, hardly even a desire, to be a gr[illegible] [illegible] He was one of th[illegible] weavers, the cave burrowers, the home n[illegible] who prepare the way for the greater [illegible] themselves who shall spring from them. He was of those who became the unk[illegible] [illegible] men. And so, on a salar[illegible] [illegible] have meant penury to a man [illegible] seeking tastes he managed to save alwa[illegible] major part of his earnings. At the bank [illegible] a modest but regular visitor to the [illegible] teller, and almost a total stranger to the [illegible] teller.

His wildest dissipation being a second [illegible] of tobacco before he went to bed—or "re[illegible]" as he would more gently have said it—he [illegible]nally heaped up enough to ask Martha [illegible] to marry him. Martha, who was the pla[illegible] woman in plain Hillsdale, accepted Will, and they were made one by the parson [illegible] wedding was not accounted "swell" even in Hillsdale.

The groomy bridegroom and the unbridey bride spent together all the time that Rudd could spare from the store. He bought for her a little frame house with a porch about as big as an upper berth, a patch of grass with a path through it to the back door, some hollyhocks of startling color, and a highly unimportant woodshed. It spelled HOM[illegible] were as happy as pe[illegible] all he could to please [illegible] even gave up his pipe [illegible] much.

Mrs. Martha Rudd was an amb[illegible] or at least restless and discontented. H[illegible] escaped a woman's supreme horror, that of being an old maid, she perked up enoug[illegible] ambitious for her husband. She na[illegible] for a while about his plodding ways, th[illegible] that satisfied him, the salary he endured. But it did no good. Will Rudd was never meant to put boots and spurs on his own feet and splash around in gore. He was for carpet [illegible]s, congress gaiters, and on wet days rub[illegible] on slushy days he even [illegible] [illegible]t he called "arctics." [illegible]ot understanding the true [illegible] husband's long-distance dreams, and [illegible] his unresponse to her am[illegible] Martha grew ambitious for th[illegible] coming. She grew frantically, [illegible]astic ambitious. Here was something Will could respond to. He could be ambi[illegible] Caesar—but vicariously. He was a groundling, but his son should climb.

Husband and wife spent evenings and evenings debating the future of the child [illegible] never agreed on the name—or the alternative names. For it is advisable to have two ready for any emergency. But the future was rosy. They were unanimous on that. President of the United States, mebbe; or at least the Pre[illegible]dent's wife.

Mrs. Rudd, who occasion[illegible] read the continued stories in the evening pap[illegible] had happened on a hero named "Eric." She favored that name—or Gwendolynne (with a "y"), as the case might be. In any event, the child's future was so glowing that it warmed Mrs. Rudd to asking one eveni[illegible]

Marthy, too small for [illegible]e dolls you see over at Bostwick's." [illegible] the golden period of his life. Ru[illegible] [illegible] well. [illegible] its [illegible]

[illegible] ence of Job without his gift [illegible] and Rudd was thorough[illegible] waited with a hopeful serenity [illegible] to the arrival of his heir—[illegible]

[illegible]ate, which had previously been [illegible]nt with denying him comforts and keep[illegible] luxuries, dealt him a blow in the [illegible] lin on his patient mouth. The doc[illegible] [illegible] im that the little body of his son had been born still. After that, it was rather a stupor of despair than courage that carried him through the vain struggle for life of the wornout housewife who became only almost a mother. It seemed merely the logical completion of the world's cruelty when the doctor laid a heavy hand on his shoulder and walked out of the door, without leaving any prescription to fill. Rudd stood like a wooden Indian, too dazed to understand or to feel. He opened the door to the undertaker and waited outside the room, just twiddling his fingers and wondering. His world had come to an end, and he did not know what to do.

At the church, the offices of the parson, and the soprano's voice from behind the flowers, [illegible] "Rock of Ages, Cleft for Me"—Marthy's favorite hymn brought the tears trickling, but he could not believe that what had happened had happened. He got through the melancholy honor of riding in the first hack in the shabby pageant, though the town looked strange from that window. He shivered stupidly at the first sight of the trench in the turf which was to be the new lodging of his family. He kept as quiet as any of the group among the mounds while the bareheaded preacher finished [illegible]s part.

[illegible] incredulity to find [illegible] heard that awfulest [illegible] the human ear—the clods rattling on a coffin [illegible] then he woke. When he [illegible]le spill dirt hideously above [illegible]eks, her brow, and the little [illegible]esh she cuddled with a rigid [illegible]t of ice—then a cry like the [illegible] ding tree split his throat and he dropped into the grave, sprawling across the casket, beating on its denying door, and sobbing.

"You mustn't go alone, Marthy. I won't let you two go all by yourselves. It's so far and

In a [illegible] event danger [illegible] had been [illegible] longed to the [illegible] Pythian and [illegible] standing was for [illegible] Rudd [illegible] black [illegible] white plume, [illegible] carried [illegible] carry [illegible] sword [illegible] the hearse and went [illegible] stopped paying his dues [illegible] alley [illegible] Somebody [illegible] cent [illegible] The man became a remembrance if that.

Rudd had long realized that people eventually become dead, but he had never realized death. He had been an oblivious child when his mother [illegible] whose [illegible] him [illegible] large enough.

And [illegible] obliterated. He was again [illegible] that familiar thing called a widower. He denied his eyes. He was as incredulous as a man who sees a magician play [illegible] trick. He had seen [illegible] understand it enough to [illegible] When [illegible] back left him at his house [illegible] than he could have imagined [illegible] Martha was not on the [illegible] room, the dinin' room [illegible] upstairs. The bed [illegible] The lamp had not been filled [illegible] was dry, the [illegible] the pitcher broken at the [illegible] at the cistern.

As he stumbled [illegible] place covering [illegible] wondered what he [illegible] the closing [illegible] its opening [illegible] in this recurring [illegible] or return to [illegible] least he did [illegible] he had ever tasted [illegible] Rudd did [illegible] though he had [illegible] for checkers [illegible] merge themselves [illegible] would not [illegible] of his [illegible] clean [illegible]

If only [illegible] had an indus[illegible]

Widowers have occasionally hunted consolation with the same sex that sent them grief. Rudd had never known any woman in town as well as he had known Martha and it had taken him years to find courage [illegible] her. The thought of [illegible] other woman with intimate int[illegible] gave him an ague sweat.

And how was he to think of taking another wife? Even if he had [illegible] with grief for his help[illegible] the only woman on earth [illegible] he have accosted another w[illegible] only debts for a dowry?

Death is an expensive thing ... every phase. The event that robbed Rudd of his wife, his child, his hope, had taken also his companion, his cook, his chambermaid, his washerwoman, the mender of his things; and in their place had left an appalling monument of bills. The only people he had permitted himself to owe money to were the grocers [illegible] brought him his grief, the doctor, the druggist, the casket-maker, the sexton and the dealer in the unreal estate who sold the tiny lots in the sad little town.

His soul was too bruised to grope its way about, but instinct told him that bills must be paid. Instinct automatically set [illegible] clearing up his accounts. For [illegible] sake he devoted himself to a stricter economy than ever. He engaged meals at Mrs. Judd's boarding house. He resolved even to rent his home. But, mercifully, there was no one in town to take the place. In economy's name, too, he put away his pipe—for one horrible evening. The next day he remembered how Marthy had sung out:

"Why don't you smoke your pipe any more, Will?" and he had answered: "I'd kind o' got out of the habit, Marthy. But I guess I'll git back in." And, Lordy, how she laughed! The laughter of the dead—it made a lonely echo in the house.

Gradually he found, as so many dismal castaways have found, that there is a mystic companionship [illegible] that word which has come out [illegible] from among [illegible] man [illegible] and [illegible] beyond [illegible] to become an [illegible] dealing in [illegible]

[illegible] task [illegible] the far[illegible] he had [illegible] from [illegible] and [illegible] family not only as [illegible] might have [illegible] but as [illegible] have been. He was [illegible] knowing [illegible] making [illegible]

[illegible] Ned's birthday. He'd have been twenty-one [illegible] if he'd lived. He'd have [illegible] would have [illegible] home [illegible] school [illegible] Harry loved the fireworks. [illegible] make a speech [illegible]

Everybody must keep [illegible] such [illegible] almanac some [illegible] diary of prayers denied. That was all Rudd did, only he wrote it up every evening. He would take [illegible] growing [illegible] first [illegible] woolens of their young.

Marthy and Eric Rudd lived just behind the diaphanous curtain of the pipe smoke, or in the nooks of the twilight shadow, or in the heart of the sitting room stove.

The frame house had no fireplace, and in its lieu he was wont to open the door of the wood stove, lean forward, elbows on knees, and gaze into the creamy core of the glow where his people moved unharmed and radiant, like the three youths conversing in the fiery furnace.

In the [illegible] looked [illegible]

For instance, Eric was already a strapping lad of seven spinning through school at a rate that would have given brain fever to a less gifted youngster, when, one day, Farmer Stebbins came to the Emporium with a four-year-old chub of a son who ran in ahead of his father, kicked his shoes in opposite directions and yelled, to the great dismay of an old maid in the "Ladies' and M[illegible] Dep't":

"Hay, Mister, gimmie pair boots with brass toes."

The father, after a formulaic pretense of reproving the lad, explained:

"We'll have to excuse him, Rudd; it's his first pair of [illegible]"

Rudd's heart was sore within him, and he was oppressed with guilt. He had never bought Eric his first pair of brass-toed boots! And he a shoe clerk!

[illegible] that Eric had [illegible] reduced several years, brought out of school and taken to St. Louis. Rudd knew what an epoch-making event this was, and he wanted [illegible] to select from a larger stock than the meager and out of date supply of Kittredge's Emporium—though this admission was only for Rudd's own family. The thumb screw could not have wrung it from him for the [illegible]

There was a similar mix-up about Eric's first long trousers which Rudd likewise overlooked [illegible] accomplished the Irish miracle of the tight boots. Eric had [illegible] breeches a long while before he put them on for the first time.

To the outer knowledge of the stranger or the neighbor, William Rudd's employer had all the good luck that was coming to him, and all of Rudd's besides. They were antitheses at every point.

Where Rudd was without ambition, importance, family, or funds, Kittredge was the richest man in town, the man of most impressive family, and easily the leading citizen. People began to talk him up for Congressman, maybe for Senator. He had held all the other town [illegible] You could [illegible] say that he had ever [illegible] officious offices in his church, his bank, his run for any office he had just walked up and [illegible]

[illegible] Rudd did not envy him his record or his fa[illegible] Clay Kittredge had children [illegible] The cemetery lodged none of them. Yet one of the [illegible] boys was always [illegible] in trouble with somebody. Mrs. Kittredge was forever cautioning her children not to play with Mrs. So-and-So's children and So-and-So would return the compliment. The town was fairly torn up with these nursery Guelph and [illegible] wars.

R[illegible] compar[illegible] the wickednesses of other [illegible] the perfections of [illegible] his genius whisper [illegible] that if Eric had lived to enter the world this side of the tobacco s[illegible] too [illegible] might have been a complete sc[illegible] breeches, instead of [illegible] skinned, studious, [illegible] of light and laughter and love that he [illegible] But Rudd banished the thought.

Eric was never ill, or only [illegible] at times to give the parents a little [illegible] rapture of anxiety and of sitting [illegible] side holding his hand and brushing [illegible] back from a hot forehead. Eric never [illegible] polite, or cruel to an animal, or [illegible] to a teacher, or backward in a class.

And Rudd's wife differed from [illegible] wife, and wives in general, and [illegible] the old Martha herself—in staying [illegible] growing more and more beautiful [illegible] Martha had been too shy and too [illegible] the truth ever to face a camera [illegible] often regretted that he owned not [illegible] photograph such as the other [illegible] ried folks of Hillsdale had on the [illegible] crayon enlargement on an [illegible] had no likeness of Martha except [illegible] heart. But thereby his fancy w[illegible] and he was enabled to imagine [illegible] fairer, every day.

It was the boy alone that grew [illegible] having become perfect, remained [illegible] in charm like the blessed [illegible] the asphodel fields of Hades.

About the time Eric Rudd outgr[illegible] schools of Hillside, and gradua[illegible] high school with a wonderful orati[illegible] writing called "Night brings [illegible]" Kittredge announced that his old [illegible] go to Harvard in the Fall. Rudd [illegible] that Eric should go to Yale. He [illegible] catalogues. Rudd was appalled [illegible] much a person had to know [illegible] even get into college. And the [illegible] early omniscient intellect was called a fr[illegible]

The prices of rooms, of meals [illegible] extra fees, the estimated allowances [illegible] and spending money dazed the poor [illegible] clerk, and nearly sent Eric into bus[illegible] fortunately, the briar pipe came to the [illegible] an unexpected legacy from an unexpected uncle.

The four years of college life were imagined [illegible] good deal of elision and an a[illegible] that would have amused [illegible] Will and Martha were chiefly [illegible] vacations at home and [illegible] New Haven, and the letters [illegible] professors.

[illegible] an athletic career [illegible] days of Hercules [illegible] tennis player, hockey [illegible] boxer, swimmer, runner [illegible] And he was the best [illegible] Haven town square [illegible] of some of the games [illegible] both as centre rush [illegible] and the coxswain [illegible] a member of all [illegible] He was a "Bones" man [illegible] and in his sophomore year [illegible] other Senior societies. And of course, he stood at the head of all his classes, though [illegible] condescended to take a single [illegible] professor.

The boy's college life lasted Rudd a thousand and one evenings. It was in beautiful contrast with the career of Kittredge's children, some of whom were forever flunking their examinations, slipping back a year, requiring expensive tutors, acquiring bad habits and getting into debt. Almost the only joy Kittredge had of them was in telegraphing them money in response to their telegrams for money—they never wrote. Their vacations either sent them scurrying on house parties or other excursions. Or if they came home they were discontented with house and parents. They corrected Kittredge's grammar, though his State accounted him an orator. They corrected Mrs. Kittredge's etiquette, though Hillsdale looked up to her as a social arbitrix.

Kittredge poured a deal of his disappointment into Rudd's ear, because his hard heart was broken and breaking anew every day, and he had to tell somebody. He knew that his old clerk would keep it where he kept all the secrets of his business, but he never knew that Rudd still had a child of his own, forging ahead without failure. Rudd could give comfort, for he had it to spare, and he was empty of envy.

It was a ghastly morning when Kittredge showed Rudd a telegram saying that his eldest son, Thomas, had thrown himself in front of a train because of the discovery that his accounts were wrong. Kittredge had found him a place in a New York bank, but the gambling fever had seized the youngster. And now he was dead, in his sins, in his shame. Dives cried out to Lazarus:

"It's hell to be a father, Will. It's an awful thing to bring children into the world and try to carry 'em through it. It's not a man's job. It's God's."

At times like these, and when Rudd heard from the tattlers, or read in the printed gossip of the evening paper concerning the multifarious wickednesses of the children of men about the earth, he felt almost glad that his boy had never lived upon so plague-infected a world. But in the soothe of twilight the old pipe persuaded him to a pleasanter view of his boy, alive and always doing the right thing, avoiding the evil.

His motto was: "Eric would have done different." He was sure of that. It was his constant conclusion.

After graduating from an imaginary Yale Eric went to an imaginary law school, in New York City—no less. Then he was admitted to that imaginary bar where a lawyer never defends an unrighteous cause, never loses a case, yet grows rich. And, of course, like every other American boy that dreams or is dreamed of, in good time he had to become President.

Eric lived so exemplary a life, was so busy in virtue, so unblemished of fault, that he could not be overlooked by the managers of the quadrennial national performance, searching with Demosthenes' lantern for a man against whom nothing could be said. They called Eric from private life to be headliner in their vaudeville.

Rudd had watched Kittredge clambering to his success, or rather wallowing to it through a swamp of mud. All the wrong things Kittredge had ever done, and their name was legion, were hurled in his path. His family scandals were dug up by the double handful and splashed in his face. Against his opponent the same methods were used. It was like a race through a marsh; and when Kittredge reached his goal, the Senate, he was so muck-besmirched, his heart had been so lacerated, the nakedness of his past so exposed, that his laurel seemed more like a wreath of poison ivy. And once mounted on his high post, he was an even better target than when he was on the wing.

Against Eric's blameless life, the arrows of slander were like darts shot toward the sun. They fell back upon the archers' heads. That was a lively night in the tobacco lagoon when the election returns came in and State after State swung to Eric's column. Rudd made it as near unanimous as he could, without making it stupid. The solid South he left unbroken, he just brought it over to Eric en bloc. For Eric, it seems, had devised what everybody else has looked for in vain, a solution of the negro problem to satisfy both North and South and the negroes. Unfortunately the details have been lost.

Marthy was there, of course; rode in the same hack with their boy. Some of the politicians and the ex-President wanted to get in, but Eric said:

"My mother and father ride with me or I won't be President."

That settled 'em. Eric even wanted to ride backward, too, but Will, as his father, insisted, and, of course, Eric obeyed, though he was President. And the weather was more like June than March, no blizzards delaying trains and distributing pneumonia.

Once the administration was begun, the newspapers differed strangely in their treatment of Eric from their attitude toward other chief magistrates, from Washington down. Realizing that Eric was an honorable man trying to do the right thing by the people, no editor or cartoonist dreamed of accusing him of an unworthy motive or an unwise act.

And when his first term was ended, the Democrats and Republicans, realizing that they had at last found a perfectly wise and honorable ruler, nominated him by acclamation at both conventions. The result was delightful; both parties elected their candidate.

Marthy and Will sat with Eric in the carriage at the second inaugural, too. There was an argument again about who should ride backward. Rudd said:

"Eric, your Excellency, these here crowds came to see you, and you ought to face 'em. As your dad, I order you to set there 'side of your mother."

But Eric said: "Dad, your Majesty, the people have seen me often enough, and as the President of these here United States, I order you to set there 'side of your wife."

And, of course, Rudd had to do it. Folks looked very much surprised to see him, and there was quite a piece in the papers about it.

To every man his day's work and his night's dream. Will Rudd has poor nourishment of the former, but he is richly fed of the latter. His failures and his poverty and the monotony of his existence are public knowledge; his dream is his own triumph and the greater for being his secret.

If, sometimes, the imagination of the matter of fact man wavers and the ugliness of his loneliness overwhelms him, thrusts through his dream like a hideous mountain side when an avalanche strips the barren crags of their fleece; and if he then breaks down and calls aloud for his child and his wife to be given back to him from Out There—these panics are also his secret. Only the homely sitting room of the lonely frame house knows them. He opens the door of the wood stove or follows his pipe smoke and rallies his courage, resumes his dream. The next morning sees him emerge from his door and go briskly to the shop as always, whether his path is through rain or sleet, or past the recurrent lilacs that have scattered many a purple snow across his sidewalk since the bankruptcy of his ambitions.

He would have been proud to be the unknown father of a great man. He was not permitted to be the father even of a humble man. Yet being denied the reality, he has taken sustenance in what might have been, and has turned "the saddest words of tongue or pen" into something almost sweet. If his child has missed the glories of what might have been, he has escaped the shames that might have been, and the bruises and heartaches and remorses that must have been, that always have been. That is the increasing consolation a bitter world offers to those who love and have lost. That was Rudd's solace. And he made the most of it, added to it a dream. He was a wise man.

After he paid his sorrowful debts, his next slow savings went to the building of a monument for his family. It is one of the handsomest shafts in the cemetery. If Rudd could brag of anything he would brag of that. The inscription took a long time to write. You could tell that by its simplicity. And you might notice the blank space left for his own name when all three shall be together again.

Rudd is now saving a third fund against the encroaching time when he shall be too feeble to get up from his knees after he has dropped upon them to unlace somebody's sandal. Lonely old orphans like Rudd must provide their own pensions. There is a will, however, which bequeaths whatever is left of his funds to an orphan home. Being a sonless father, he thinks of the sons who have no fathers to do for them what he was so fain to do for his. It is not a large fund for these days when rich men toss millions as tips to posterity, but it is pretty good for a shoe clerk. And it will mean everything to some Eric that gets himself really born.

If you drop in at the Emporium and ask for a pair of shoes or boots, or slippers or rubbers, or trees or pumps, and wait for old Rudd to get round to you, you will be served with deference, yet with a pride of occupation that is almost priestly. And you will probably buy something, whether you want it or not.

But, above all things, don't hurt his pride by offering to help him to his feet if he shows some difficulty in rising when he has performed his genuflexion before you. Just pretend not to notice, as he would pretend not to notice any infirmity or vanity of yours. It is his vanity to be still the best shoe clerk in town—and he is.

In these days he is so supremely comfortable in his old shoes that his own fellow clerks hardly know what to make of him. If they only understood what is going on in his private world they would realize that Eric is about to be married—in the White House. The boy was so busy for the country and loved his mother so, that he had no time to go sparkin.

But Marthy got after him and said:

"Eric, they're goin' to make you President for the third term. Oh, what's that old tradition got to do with it? Can't they change it? Well, you mark my words, like as not you'll settle down and live in the White House the rest of your life. You'd ought to have a wife, Eric, and be raisin' some children to comfort your declining years. What would Will and me have done without you? I'm getting old, Eric, and I'd kind o' like to see how it feels to be a grandmother, before they take me out to the"—— But that was a word Rudd could never frame even in his thoughts.

Eric, being a mighty good boy, listened to his mother as always. And Marthy looked everywhere for an ideal woman, and when she found one, Eric fell in love with her right away. It is not every child that is so dutiful as that.

The marriage is to take place shortly, and Rudd is very busy with the details. He will go on to Washington, of course—of evenings.

Martha is insisting on Will's buying a dress soot for the festivities, but he is in doubt about that. Martha, though, shall have the finest dress in the land, for she is more beautiful even than Eric's bride, and she doesn't look a day older than she did when she was a bride herself. A body would never guess how many years ago that was.

The White House is going to be all lit up, and a lot of big folks will be there—a couple of kings, like as not. There will be fried chicken for dinner and ice cream—mixed maybe, chocolate and vanella, and p'raps a streak of strawb'ry. And there will be enough so's everybody can have two plates. Marthy will prob'ly bake the cake herself, if she can get that old White House stove to working right.

Rudd has a great surprise in store for her. He's going to tell a good one on Marthy. At just the proper moment, he's going to lean over—Lord, he hopes he can keep his face straight—and say kind of offhand:

"Do you remember, Marthy, the time when you was makin' little baby-clothes for the President of the United States here, and you says to me—you see, Eric, she'd made me quit smokin', herself, but she plumb forgot all about that—and she says to me, s'she, 'Why don't you smoke your pipe any more, Will?' she says. And I says, 'I'd o' got out of the habit, Marthy,' s'I, 'but I guess I'll git back in,' s'I. I said it right off like that, 'I guess I'll git back in!' s'I. Remember, Marthy?"

THE END.

"The Frame House Had No Fireplace, and in Its Lieu He Was Wont to Open the Door of the Wood Stove, Lean Forward, Elbows on Knees, and Gaze Into the Creamy Core of the Glow Where His People Moved Unharmed and Radiant, Like the Three Youths Conversing in the Fiery Furnace."

By THE DOWAGER.

THE gowns worn by the women at the Assembly Friday evening and some of those seen at the opera and at many of our recent smart affairs thus far this season are the handsomest that any single season has produced. Undoubtedly this is the result of the happy days which some of us have been enjoying as the result of tab-keeping on the industrial and war stocks. The same reason is probably the cause of so many liberal subscriptions to different entertainments on the social schedule for this month and next. A number of society women are to open their Back Bay homes for lectures and musicales for both local and war charities.

o o o

Several debutante parties are to come this month, although the majority are now out of the way and making room for the entertainments planned for the girls out two and more years. Of course interest is still strong in the engagement announcement of Miss Dorothy Jordan and Mr. Robinson, particularly among the debutantes of recent years. Miss Jordan, however, is down for feature dances at different subscription affairs to come, and several others of the younger girls who are dance enthusiasts are likely to aid charity events by volunteering to dance before the year is far advanced.

o o o

Debutantes of recent seasons comprise the crowd of enthusiasts who attend the private Tuesday morning dance series, the next of which meets at the home of Mrs. Lucius Sargent, No. 315 Dartmouth street. The large crowd of girls always at these dances is an index of the enthusiasm which all still have for the modern dance steps.

SMART SOCIETY ARRAYED IN STRIKING GOWNS GOES TO TOY THEATRE BENEFIT

Society girl program and flower vendors attired in uniform gowns of white with tri-colored sashes and white muslin caps trimmed with ribbons of red, white and blue, and one of the smartest gowned and most brilliant society gatherings of the year were features of the Lafayette fund entertainment for the benefit of the war sufferers given at the Toy Theatre last Tuesday evening.

The most of Boston's society contingent were present.

Mrs. Horatio Slater, who arrived late [illegible] to a dinner given to a party of friends at her Beacon street home preceding the performance, [illegible] in a black satin gown embroidered in large silver thread leaves, with the decollete bodice in cream-colored lace and with a necklace of large brilliants. An ermine wrap lined with a satin of vivid yellow added to the smartness of this costume, further set off by diamond earring pendants and a gold lorgnette secured with a diamond studded gold chain.

Mrs. Roger Wolcott in a black satin brocade gown trimmed with white lace and a hint of silver thread on the [illegible] with a neck band of pearls and brilliants, with a party of friends occupied the box adjacent to Mrs. Slater's.

Another box was occupied by the Viscount and Viscountess P. de Fontenilliat, the latter in white chiffon over white satin, with a large crimson velvet rose [illegible] the corsage [illegible]

The extreme right [illegible] the stage had Mr. and Mrs. William C. Endicott, who were among the first arrivals. Mrs. Endicott was attractive in a gown of dark green velvet [illegible] which was worn a wrap of sable fur.

Mrs. Russell Codman, a member of the Lafayette Fund Committee, was in black chiffon and velvet [illegible] bined with silver. She occupied a box with her husband, where, following the "swan dance" by Miss Anne Means the couple entertained the attractive [illegible] who, after [illegible] from the [illegible] ballet swan [illegible] and [illegible] dress with [illegible] feather wings [illegible] in a pale pink satin [illegible] same shade of rose panne velvet, and with a crimson velvet and satin rose with a touch of pink chiffon on the corsage.

Miss Mary Ames [illegible] guest of Mrs. Nathaniel Thayer [illegible] Johns, was in [illegible] satin [illegible] gold embroidery with a black satin sable-collared wrap to match. She wore pearl ornaments and in her hair a brilliant studded comb. Her hostess, Mrs. Thayer, was in black satin and tulle. Three ropes of pearls fell to her waist, and she wore diamond studded combs in her hair.

Splendid pearls were worn by Mrs. J. Bryce Allan, who was attired in taupe chiffon over silk, with trimming of gold-thread embroidery, which formed the wide shoulder straps. Miss Elise Ames presented a handsome picture in a gown of tulle over black satin charmeuse, which was without sleeves, but which had narrow ruffles falling from the shoulders. A string of pearls and a handsome jeweled watch, worn on her wrist, added to the effect. Miss Ames' sister, Miss Olivia Ames, was one of the program girls.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Little, the parents of Miss Means, were in the front row, Mrs. Little wearing a gown of dark tulle and satin. Back a row or two sat Mr. and Mrs. Eben D. Jordan, whose daughter, Miss Dorothy Jordan, executed the "skating dance." Mrs. Jordan wore a black satin and lace gown and a number of beautiful brilliants.

Mrs. Barrett, who sat near the front row, was also attractive in a gown of black satin and cream colored lace.

Mrs. Homer B. Richardson, another attractive young spectator, was particularly smart in pink satin trimmed with a profusion of cream colored lace. Mrs. Thomas C. Thatcher who, with her husband, sat well up in front, wore an evening wrap with ermine collar and cuffs over a gown of black satin effectively trimmed with white lace. Her daughter, Miss Dorothy Thatcher, was in pale pink satin.

A row behind the Thatchers was Miss Mary Vaughan in black satin with a long, pale yellow velvet wrap trimmed with fox fur.

Mrs. Charles Whitney was in a cream colored satin and lace gown. With Mrs. Whitney was her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Geoffrey Whitney, formerly the Countess of Yarmouth and one of the handsomest women in the audience. A front row spectator, Mrs. Francis S. Watson, a sister of Mrs. Whitney, was in a gown of cream-colored satin and lace over which was worn a brilliant hued Chinese mandarin coat.

Miss Adele Thayer proved attractive in a black satin gown trimmed with black lace. A long wrap of yellow satin with embroidery of the same shade heightened the effect. The Henry D. Tudors were with Mr. and Mrs. Francis L. Higginson, the latter of whom was in a dark green velvet wrap elaborately shirred at the waist to form a deep yoke effect.

[illegible] wrap with high [illegible] collar. She wore [illegible]

Mrs. George Lee, sitting across the aisle from the Jordans, looked attractive in a black [illegible] with [illegible] embroidery [illegible] wrap with [illegible] cuffs.

[illegible] prices ranging from 25 cents to $2. Money bags carried by the vendors bulged with bills, particularly those carried by Miss Ray Slater, Miss Phyllis Sears and Mrs. Kenneth Howard, who was Ruth Gaston.

The encored dance of Miss Jordan and the beautiful swan dance feature by Miss Means were special attractions which held the attention and interest of the fashionable audience.

Quickest, Surest Cough Remedy is Home-Made

Easily Prepared in a Few Minutes. Cheap but Unequaled.

Some people are constantly annoyed from one year's end to the other with a persistent bronchial cough, which is wholly unnecessary. Here is a home-made remedy that gets right at the cause and will make you wonder what became of it.

Get 2½ ounces Pinex (50 cents' worth) from any druggist, pour into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. Start taking it at once. Gradually but surely you will notice the phlegm thin out and then disappear altogether, thus ending a cough that you never thought would end. It also loosens the dry hoarse or tight cough and heals the inflammation in a painful cough with remarkable rapidity. Ordinary coughs are conquered by it in 24 hours or less. Nothing better for bronchitis, winter coughs and bronchial asthma.

This Pinex and Sugar Syrup mixture makes a full pint—enough to last a family a long time—at a cost of only 54 cents. Keeps perfectly and tastes pleasant. Easily prepared. Full directions with Pinex.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol and is famous the world over for its ease, certainty and promptness in overcoming bad coughs, chest and throat colds.

Get the genuine. Ask your druggist for "2½ ounces Pinex" and do not accept anything else. A guarantee of absolutely satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.—Advertisement.

DANDRUFF MAKES HAIR FALL OUT

25-cent bottle of "Danderine" keeps hair thick, strong, beautiful.

Girls! Try this! Doubles beauty of your hair in few minutes.

Within ten minutes after an application of Danderine you cannot find a single trace of dandruff or falling hair and your scalp will not itch, but what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use, when you see new hair, fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—growing all over the scalp.

A little Danderine immediately doubles the beauty of your hair. No difference how dull, faded, brittle and scraggy, just moisten a cloth with Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. The effect is amazing—your hair will be light, fluffy and wavy, and have an appearance of abundance; an incomparable lustre, softness and luxuriance.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store or toilet counter, and prove that your hair is as pretty and soft as any—that it has been neglected or injured by careless treatment—that's all—you surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. For sale by Riker-Jaynes and all reliable druggists.—Advertisement.

The organization is rehearsing for its annual minstrel show which will take place in Boston College Hall on February 22 and 23. Edward V. Freeman is chairman of the committee in charge of the arrangements. The proceeds will go towards the building fund.

Philomatheia to Give First Dance Feb. 1

[illegible] promises to be one of the most notable social events of the year in Catholic social circles is the reception dance of the Philomatheia Society at the Copley-Plaza Hotel, Tuesday evening, February 1. The society was organized last Fall to act as an auxiliary to the Alumni Association of Boston College in furthering the interests of the college in social and financial ways.

As class dances have been abandoned by the classes at Boston College this year, this one will take the place of the Junior Prom, and [illegible] has created great interest among the undergraduates. The senior class will be special guests of the evening and will act as ushers, wearing cap and gown. Other guests will include the faculty of the college, Governor McCall and a number of State and national dignitaries.

The proceeds are to be devoted to the athletic fund at the college. Mrs. Edward A. Shuman, president of the society, is assisted by a large number of well-known Bostonians.

The other officers of the society are Dennis F. Sheehan and Mrs. Martha Moore Avery, vice-presidents, Mrs. John P. Feeney, financial secretary; Miss Louise Fannon, recording secretary; Mrs. John P. Read, treasurer, Rev. Michael Jessupp, S. J., [illegible] of Boston College, has been appointed chaplain of the society, by Rev. Charles W. Lyons, S. J., president of Boston College.

Among the women interested in the success of the Philomatheia are Mesdames John J. Lyons, William F. Fitzgerald, James N. Barrey, T. H. Murnane, Daniel McIsaac, John Furfey, Michael Ward, Edward J. Brandon, Hugh McGrath, E. J. Callanan, Agnes Bulger, John F. Fitzgerald, Thomas F. PROFESSIONAL WOMEN TO MEET AT SOMERSET

A whist and tea party under the auspices of St. Catherine's Guild, which is composed of professional women of Greater Boston, will be held in the Hotel Somerset, Saturday, January 22, from 3 to 7 o'clock. Miss Margaret A. Sheridan will be in charge of the progressive whist games and Miss Alice Driscoll of the bridge whist. The Misses Blanche Hamilton Fox, Mary C. Mellyn, Margaret C. Brawley and Charlotte A. Powell will pour tea.

The hostesses will be Mrs. Mary Agnes Mahan, chairman; Dr. Agnes G. Kelly, Misses Katherine R. Malloy, Margaret C. O'Hearn, Mary C. Mellyn, Mary Alma Cotter, Ellen M. Cronin, Honora T. O'Dowd, Mary J. Regan, Mary E. Kelley, Mary F. Finneran, Mary A. Barr, Ellen J. Costello, Marcella E. Donegan, Mary J. Foley, Roberta M. Cummins, Margaret C. Brawley, Catherine F. Byrne, Katherine K. King, Mary H. Keyes and Laura A. Ells.

MINSTREL SHOW REHEARSALS ON

Rehearsals for the annual minstrel show of the East Boston Catholic Literary Association are being held at the clubhouse on Meridian street. The show will be given this year at the new Central Square Theatre and will be under the direction of George Harlow. The chorus will consist of 150 mixed voices.

The members of the show committee are Thomas J. Dawson, chairman; George F. Murphy, treasurer; Bernard J. Hughes, secretary; Arthur H. Stout, Nathaniel White, Thomas W. McLean, Thomas J. Riley, J. Paul Finn, Timothy J. O'Brien, Sidney Milward, James E. Conway and Manuel J. Marshall.

FEDERATION OF CATHOLIC WOMEN

At a recent meeting of the League of Catholic Women an address was made by Right Rev. Monsignor Splaine. He suggested that all societies of Catholic women form a federation and centralize their work.

According to his plan, each individual society would continue its work but the organizations would meet at least annually at a general conference.

The League of Catholic Women would be the chief representative body.

At the next meeting of the League of Catholic Women, His Eminence Cardinal O'Connell will speak on the subject of "Federation."

Newest Gowns Being Designed to Exploit the Petticoat Feature

Farthingale Revival Is Coming

AN interesting feature of many of the new gowns is the conscious effort made to display the petticoat. For several seasons the latter garment has been absolutely ignored by Fashion; and now by way of atonement it is made a special feature of dressy frocks where lace, chiffon or plaited underlays may be fittingly introduced.

Of course, the petticoat which is attached to the dress is more familiarly known as the drop skirt or foundation, but its lines and mission are identical. The upper part is made to fit rather closely to the figure, but from the knees down there is a distinct effort toward flare and furbelows.

An example of the petticoat frock is noted in a pioneer of Spring fashions. The material is old blue taffeta, draped and distended after the new-old modes. The lifting up of the fabric brings to view a petticoat of silvered lace, made with two flounces over a slip of chiffon cloth.

The effect is extremely dainty and feminine and brings to mind the oft-quoted lines about the feet that steal like little mice beneath the petticoat—only ankles and several inches of silk hose are on view these days along with the revived article of feminine apparel.

FARTHINGALES HERE.

Style indications point to a fairly imperative use of reeds, heavy cables or other forms of extenders for hip draperies. Indeed, the slim lines which women have been cultivating for more than a decade and a half [illegible] for naught in the Spring calculations. The great width introduced in skirt hems during the last two seasons has gradually been applied to the hip line.

It appears that one cannot possibly put too much material in the skirt. The size of the waist, the girth of the hips, the conformation of the ankles—all these have absolutely no weight in influencing the quantity of fabric or the bouffant lines of the latest dress models. If one is slim, well and good; if she is not slim it is her great misfortune, because the fashion arbiters have, as usual, forgotten the existence of women who are fair, fat and forty, and who cannot conceal these patent physical facts.

The clever ones, however, will make the best of a bad situation. They will consult their dressmakers and, in many instances, insist upon having their own way, despite all manner of expert advice to the contrary. One of the most successful schemes of suggesting hip draperies and yet maintaining a comparatively flat line, is the use of the cascade or jabot arrangement, which Worth emphasized in several of his models this Fall, and which were also noted in certain of the gowns signed by Callot and Cheruit.

This arrangment permits a decorative panel down either side over which the apron drapery of the front and back falls in a more or less set and formal manner. Sometimes the cascade is of lace flouncing and often it happens that the material is faced with a contrasting color, which greatly adds to the decorative effect.

While such manipulation of the fabric is very good for the woman who must confess to an unfashionable avoirdupois, it is also a style that is especially becoming to the girlish type of figure. It does not add a sense of years and weight and destroy the natural lines, as is the case with many of the recent dress models whose origin is traced—not unerringly, it must be confessed—to Spanish sources.

AND KIMONOS COMING.

Certain of the new fashions revived the hope that the kimono might be in for a period of restoration. It seems, though, that if such is to be the case, it will be deferred for another season. The consensus of opinion implies a preference for the set in sleeve, with the shoulder sometimes extended to form an epaulette or cap.

There is, indeed, a tentative display of sleeves of elbow length, flared in bell contour and falling over a fitted forearm section. The result is rather pleasing, since it breaks the long, straight line of the arm.

The diaphanous yoke and sleeve is bound to remain a feature of dresses for afternoon and informal evening models. There is nothing new to recommend this; but the fact that women of all ages and weights have found it becoming will, in itself, be sufficient to carry the vogue through another season. The most novel infusion will be the widening of the sleeve in the bishop suggestion.

At present women are much interested in dresses of panne or chiffon velvet, with fur trimmings and touches of metallic embroideries. Such dresses are not new by any manner of means. They have been shown and they have been worn since early Fall. [illegible] shops are offering such wonderful values in these and as there are yet three months in which they may be seasonably worn, their vogue is bound to be prolonged, due to the fact that they are being pushed by the premature appearance of cottons, linens and silks destined for Summer attention.

MIXED FABRICS USED.

That the compose dress will be popular seems to be a foregone conclusion. This assurance is based on present conditions. Right through the Fall and up to the present time the dress or three-piece costume of more than one fabric, and frequently of more than one color, has been considered among the very smartest forms of apparel that a woman of discriminating taste should wear.

We have had chiffon and velvet, Georgette crepe and satin; broadcloth and silk voile; fur and metal brocades—in fact, every familiar and many unfamiliar materials have been associated to evolve unusual, and, on the whole, very attractive models.

This is likely to continue when the garments marking the Winter of sartorial discontent have given way to those that usher in showers and flowers and other things supposed to hail the coming of Spring. Taffetas and satins are already indicated and there is every reason to believe that later on we will see them allied with linens, cotton etamines and French crepes in some delightful and unusual manner.

The objection that satin will not launder and that linen will wrinkle [illegible] has long ago been met by the modern process of cleansing apparel through the art of the dry cleaner. Therefore, a compose garment may be worn on several occasions before showing soil and then it may be sent away for the cleaning operation and returned in all the beauty of its original freshness. Its life is really prolonged by not undergoing the rather strenuous tubbing, at one time the only known means of reviving a delicate garment.

SHADE COMBINING.

The designers are combining a lovely shade of blue like that of the Della Robbia ware, with cream white and with pale gray to produce charming frocks which may be worn for the afternoon tea, the matinee, the art conference, or, in fact, for any day occasion of a more or less social charater.

According to the becomingness of the color the white or the blue is placed next the face and then the frock is lengthened by the color least becoming to the wearer. Some women like blue and others have a veritable passion for white or cream tones, which they find soften the skin and do not dull the eyes. Such frocks are elaborated with charming touches of hand embroideries and sometimes they have the sleeves and neck completed with lace frills. On the whole, though, lace is not in overwhelming evidence on models of this sort.

Fur Coat, Desire of All Women

EVERY woman of fine sartorial taste wishes to possess a fur coat. This season there is infinite variety in choice, and prices are somewhat less than those prevailing a year or so ago. The coats are more shapely and becoming than their predecessors. Some are made of moire caracul, or of seal or Persian lamb. The majority of them are finished with contrasting pelts.

Now Is the Time to Buy Furs

The girl who has been waiting for an opportunity to buy furs at reduced prices will be able to [illegible] her longing for a new set at a reasonable price by taking advantage of the sales in [illegible] most of the big shops just now.

One should remember, however, that there is a great difference between cheap furs and furs of quality. A cheap fur is never economical in the long run. It is a good plan to purchase furs th[illegible] more or less staple. Eve[illegible] some new pelt is offered [illegible] prime favorite, but its v[illegible] more or less ephemeral, and the following season finds it marked [illegible] back number, much to the disappointment of its possessor.

Unless one is in a position to pursue straws of fashion without regard to cost, it is better to [illegible] furs. Generally speaking, th[illegible] more becoming to the majority of women than are light pelts. [illegible] over, they are less conspicuous [illegible] on the whole, more rich in appearance. It is comforting, though, [illegible] the woman who buys light [illegible] who already possesses su[illegible] who has tired of them, t[illegible] that they can be dyed, gener[illegible] a satisfactory manner, al[illegible] much depends on their con[illegible] when she sends them to her d[illegible] establishment.

All the fox furs are to be recommended for their beauty and their modishness, but they are soft and do not wear well. [illegible] practical and less costly is the natural raccoon and also skunk and seal dyed muskrat.

The [illegible] of black-and-white accessories bids fair to be [illegible] at southern resorts

Big Shortage in French Flowers

THE scarcity of French artificial flowers has been noted by women who are quick to discern the difference between foreign and domestic made [illegible] offered for wear with the [illegible] evening gowns. It is stated that the last shipment of flowers from France reached these shores some six months ago and proved of sufficient quantity to tide over the holiday demand.

Now, however, the shortage is threatened, as practically no flowers are being sent over. A French woman engaged for years in the manufacture of exquisite blossoms of velvet and satin, has, with characteristic foresight and [illegible], come to this country and opened a factory so that the American ladies will not be too greatly [illegible] the bouquets [illegible] of more [illegible] days. This business woman has engaged about three hundred girls and hopes to make the transplanted occupation a worthwhile and prosperous affair.

Of course, the [illegible] will be [illegible] by the [illegible] of this [illegible]. This, in itself, may prove something of a handicap to begin with because of the difference in [illegible] and in quality. Also the girls will have to be trained, as they lack the exquisite and inherent [illegible] capabilities of the Paris flower makers.

One of the [illegible] differences between the flowers manufactured in this country and those from the other side of the Atlantic lies in the fineness of the foliage, which is a feature of French-made flowers and which is lacking in the domestic variety. An expert can tell instantly by the foliage where the flower is made.

Another interesting detail about corsage bouquets is the [illegible] pristine beauty [illegible] the velvet [illegible] forms were [illegible] manufactured in Germany and then shipped to Paris and to America. Now [illegible] American manufacturers.

Candy Making in the Home Kitchen

WHERE is the housewife who does not find it convenient to make candy. Homemade sweet often fill a want which would not be supplied if the housekeeper was lacking in talent.

Here are some recipes which are pronounced satisfactory.

Mint Turkish Paste.—Three tablespoonfuls granulated gelatin, one-third cupful orange juice, one-half cupful minced fresh fruit, 6 drops essence of peppermint, 2 cupfuls granulated sugar, ¾ cupful cold water, 1 tablespoonful lemon juice, ¾ cupful candied cherries, [illegible], green coloring.

Let the gelatin soak in the fruit juices till the liquid has been absorbed. Stir together sugar, water and mint, set over a slow fire till the sugar is dissolved, then add the gelatin and boil for twenty minutes. Color, and when almost cool stir in the cherries and turn into an unbuttered bread-pan. Let stiffen overnight, then sift confectioners' sugar thickly over the paste, loosen at the edges with a sharp knife, and pull onto a board dredged with confectioners' sugar. Cut in cubes and roll in sugar.

Candied Orange or Grapefruit Peel.—After removing the peel from the [illegible] put it into boiling water and [illegible] until tender, changing the water twice. Drain, cut into strips [illegible] and weigh. To each pound [illegible] a pound of sugar [illegible] half pound of water. Boil the sugar and water for [illegible] then add the orange peel and simmer gently till transparent, about thirty minutes. [illegible] each piece in granulated sugar and dry on a tray away from direct heat. Grapefruit peel may be candied in the same way, with the exception that the water should be changed four times in the parboiling.

Date Loaf.—Two cupfuls [illegible] cupful milk, [illegible] tablespoonfuls butter, 1 pound stoned dates, 1 cupful pecan or other chopped nuts.

Mix sugar, milk and butter and boil till a fairly soft ball is formed when a little of the mixture is dropped into cold water. Add dates and nuts, beat till creamy, knead till stiff, and shape into a loaf with the hand, after rolling it in a damp cloth. This may be wrapped in paraffin-paper, slipped into a box of suitable size, and presented with a card saying that it should be sliced as needed.

Black Walnut Panoche.—One and one-half cupfuls granulated sugar, 1½ cupfuls light brown sugar, few grains salt, 1 cupful milk, 1 cupful chopped black walnuts, 8 drops almond flavoring.

Stir sugar and milk while the mixture is heating, and then let it boil without stirring until a soft ball is formed, when a little is dropped in cold water. Let it stand till tepid, beat thoroughly, and when it begins to grow creamy add the walnuts and flavoring. Pour into a buttered pan and when hard cut neatly into squares with a knife which has been dipped in boiling water.

Peanut Brittle.—Two cupfuls granulated sugar, 2 tablespoonfuls butter, 2 cupfuls shelled, roasted peanuts, ¼ teaspoonful soda.

Caramelize the sugar till light brown, add the butter and soda, beat in quickly, stir in the nuts, and spread at once on an inverted tin. Use a clean smooth omelet pan for caramelizing the sugar. Heat slowly at first so the sugar will not burn before melting and stir gently with the back of the spoon.

How to Keep Silverware Clean

IN a little book of Household Recipes [illegible] famous [illegible] of New York, the following directions are given for the [illegible] of silverware.

Never use any silver polish without knowing its ingredients or unless the preparation is guaranteed [illegible] suggestion [illegible] for example, [illegible] soaps and preparations [illegible] by [illegible] jewelers and silversmiths. Where economy is a [illegible] the following will remove [illegible].

[illegible] whiting [illegible] with a [illegible] pro[illegible].

[illegible] whiting [illegible] and when [illegible] ammonia [illegible] drug[illegible] prepa[illegible] use. Also [illegible] al [illegible].

[illegible] silver [illegible] only [illegible] perfectly clean [illegible] cold water and [illegible] for fifteen minutes [illegible] final [illegible] than [illegible] should [illegible] the kettle.

TO CLEAN SILVERWARE.

[illegible] best [illegible] material [illegible] several times [illegible] towels [illegible] cotton [illegible] as it [illegible] cloths [illegible].

[illegible] used for [illegible] should be perfectly soft [illegible] slightest particle of grit, as otherwise the article [illegible] come [illegible].

[illegible] should be used [illegible] dries [illegible] especially for the purpose.

[illegible] colored [illegible].

WHEN SILVER TARNISHES.

[illegible] sulphur [illegible] Silver bags and linings for silver boxes should be made of [illegible] cotton flannel and a loose [illegible] to throw over the top of silver box at night. [illegible] found a [illegible] keeping the articles bright.

A lump of camphor kept in the silver drawer will help to prevent [illegible]. Never allow rubber of any kind to be placed near silver.

[illegible] Rub with ammonia, [illegible] article [illegible] basin of wet [illegible].

Medicine Stains—Rub with cloth dampened with sulphuric acid and wash immediately with soap and water. Polish as usual.

Ink Stains—Make a paste of chloride of lime and water and rub briskly over spot; wash immediately, and do not let acid remain on a moment longer than necessary.

Silver Ink Wells.—To clean, shake around in them small bird-shot and a little vinegar and water.

To keep steel knives bright, occasionally rub hard with a piece of raw potato dipped in charcoal or bath brick.

Whenever the use of an acid is recommended for cleaning, it is always wise and often imperative, to protect the hands, clothing and everything except that part of an article intended for the application.

To Hang a Skirt

An easy way to hang a skirt by oneself is to put a piece of chalk in the opening of the dining-room table and push the table together so it holds the chalk firmly. Then with the skirt on, turn slowly around chalking the skirt as you turn. This done, take the skirt off and with a yard-stick mark off the same number of inches below the chalk-line that you desire the skirt to be. If carefully done, the garment will hang beautifully.

A New Chapter in the Eventful Life of Nat Goodwin

By Back Stage

[illegible] Reserved

NATHANIEL CARL GOODWIN, and we are among the first to divulge his middle name, is earning his wages by telling six stories and giving two imitations. And for any one making his daybew in [illegible] that's pretty [illegible] a [illegible] outside of Bluebeard and Henry the Eighth. Nat has run a dead heat with DeWolf Hopper for being the bravest man in the world's history. And we hazard that Nat may yet go Henry one better, for his step is still [illegible]

We're sore because the theatre management can make Nat tell stories, and we never could. Back in the Spring of 1912, Nat's last appearance on Broadway, he did Fagin in "Oliver Twist," and it was the [illegible] part [illegible] During the run of that show we tried like thunder [illegible] a week regular, to get Nat to tell us a few stories, but he never made a [illegible]. By the hour we [illegible] dressing-room, watching him make up and make down. Nat is the greatest make-up artist in the world. Ask any woman.

So it is an event in our life to hear Mister Goodwin in story form. In his dressing-room Nat would sit and look at us pityingly, and had it not been that Constance Collier, who was doing Nancy, would drop in now and then and say a few kind words, we'd been withered long since by the celebrated actor's annoyed gaze. Speaking of records, we hold the record for having bored Nat Goodwin more than anyone he ever looked at. Whenever he saw us coming he'd send his dresser down to the corner for a little something. Else he'd never been able to get himself ready for the famous "den scene," of whose imminence we would be warned by the distant squeaks of the orchestral violins playing that raucous old tune suggestive of the London dives, "Pop Goes the Weasel

At length we were driven to a rash extreme. Obsessed with the delusion that we must land some funny stories from Nat or lose out heavy in the esteem of the editor, we faked half a dozen by lifting them from various obscure sources and submitting them to Nat, old boy, for his official approval before publication under his name. The heading we had evolved to grace the top of the bunch was thi

"A few Good Ones by Nat Goodwin."

We left them for Nat to look over, and when we came back for the great reclamation a day or two later we saw right off the bat that he had never gotten beyond that first line. Why should he? It was enough to exterminate the existence of the most formidable reader.

We'll never cease to remember what Nat said when we asked him "how he liked 'em

"Aw, puerile stuff—puerile!" And he looked around as if about to call in Bill Sykes to knock us on the nut. In that word "puerile" all the stress was loaded onto the "rile" part. We had Nat riled if nothing more. But we won't deny that the adjective described us and our efforts sufficiently well to apply it in gigantic swashes

"Wait'll I get my book out," Nat grumbled. "I'll give yuh some that. Then yull get a real story

"What's in the book?" we asked, accepting a match which reminded us explosively of the date (it was April 1) when we struck it.

"Oh, Los Angeles stuff," he said, "and lines on the culture of alfalfa."

But we never got a look-in at the book. We were too young and we might have turned to chapters which had nothing whatever to do with alfalfa

Well, out of the six stories Nat reeled off the other afternoon two, to our knowledge, were prehistoric. The opener was the moss-covered anecdote about the uprising in Ireland which, Pat assured the traveler, would start right away only the police wouldn't let 'em. Walter Kelly has pulled that for many a weary season, and though Walter repeats an awful lot of his stuff year in and year out, and gets away with it; we never yet heard him tell a story that had been used by some other guy first

The other tale Nat handed over the footlights which has whiskers trailing along the ground was the one about the two men telling the bartender funny stories, when the first one doesn't pay for the drink and the second asks, "Where's my change"

Now you know, rough reader, that nobody but Nat Goodwin would have nerve enough to pull that antique out of the attic A. D. 1915.

In our self-appointed role of infallible joke judge we will now proceed to unfold the remaining four, which were new to us, and we hope will strike you approximately the same way. (Cheer up, Nat).

"We were at a country hotel in Denver" (Colorado papers kindly reprint). "It was midwinter and bitter cold—colder inside the hotel than out in the snow. All the guests were being frost-bitten, and the members of our company were huddled in the lobby trying to blow warm air into each other's ears, when we looked around and saw an old doctor hobbling up stairs with his whiskers frozen. One of our men yelled at him, "Say, doc, which room did you have?"

"About the time Corbett was champion," (1892-97), "I was talking to an Englishman on puglism. He said

"'I say, Goodwin, this man Corbett, your American fighter, comes over here and plays at our best theatres—it's outrageous, y'know. I say, he fairly desecrates drama—oh, he's a miserable specimen of an actor——

"Yes," said Nat, "but he's a fine specimen of manhood—wonderful physique, fine to look at, and hard as nails. Why, you can't hurt Corbett with a bullet'—

"'Aw, I say, what a pity!'"

After the laugh ripples had subsided Nat went on with this:

"Some years ago I was playing my annual failure in London. Hopper was there, Gillette was there, some of the other boys. We were in the Garrick Club and an Englishman said to me:

"'Tell me, Goodwin, the essential difference between American and English humor.'

"Well," said Nat, "we paint our picture in water color and you use whitewash. We Americans leave a little to the imagination. For instance—It was a rainy Sunday in a little town in Pennsylvania. A stranger asked a passer-by where the postoffice was. The passer walked right along without answering, but after he had gone a couple of blocks he turned and came all the way back to where the stranger had remained standing. 'Say,' the passer said, 'did you want to know where the postoffice was?' The stranger looked at the fresh guy and said 'No.'

"'Yes, go on,' said the Englishman. 'Why, Goodwin, you silly ass, do you mean to say that's a joke? Why, all I can see to that is that the two men were simply rude to each other!'"

Nat's exit story was about a ride he took in a jaunting car in Ireland. The driver was going very slow, and Nat feared the horse might be overworked, after he had made noble efforts to proceed faster at the behest of the driver. Finally, Nat, exasperated at the shambling pace of the animal, yelled at the man:

"Say, driver, remember we're not goin' to any funeral."

"'No, begorry, and it's no fire we're a-runn[illegible] nayther.'"

After which Nat impersonated Joe Jeff[illegible] the come-back of Rip Van Winkle, and Henry Irving in a bit of old Shylock. We bet not one in a hundred of the audience had ever seen either Jefferson or Irving, because we haven't, but everybody gave Nat a hand anyhow.

As one or two women have said, Nat may be a bad actor, but he's a good actor.

JERRY—Yes, I have.

MRS. HILLARY—Lucette!

JERRY—Well, I liked Jerry, and I like to [illegible] that [illegible] blood!

MRS. HILLARY—[illegible] as good as it [illegible] the money and save a scandal.

JERRY—[illegible]

Here we see Stuart Robson, Julian Eltinge, Mabel Acker and Beverly West.

[illegible] that's what I intend to do.

MRS. HILLARY—[illegible] the insurance company? [illegible]

JERRY—Oh, I don't know. [illegible] I'm superstitious. [illegible] Jerry would like me to [illegible]

MRS. HILLARY—But [illegible]

JERRY—[illegible] comfortably in [illegible] something and [illegible]

MRS. HILLARY—[illegible] was [illegible]

JERRY—[illegible] the insurance company [illegible] anyway [illegible]

MRS. HILLARY—You do get the queerest notions.

JERRY—[illegible] morality to rob a syndicate or a [illegible], or anything associated with a board of directors, but that $15,000 weighs on [illegible]

MRS. HILLARY—[illegible]

JERRY—I mean [illegible]

MRS. HILLARY—[illegible] worried.

JERRY—That's it. [illegible] Ye Gods! So overworked [illegible] a bouquet of [illegible]

BISTER—The compliments [illegible]

JERRY—[illegible] Bister, if you take [illegible] Baldwin, I'll [illegible] your neck. And, understand [illegible]

BISTER—Yes, [illegible]

JERRY—How [illegible]

BISTER—Five dollars [illegible] the respect and five more if [illegible]

JERRY—Well, I'll let you [illegible] five for accepting the bouquet. Give it to Mrs. Hillary. But I will not see him.

BISTER—[illegible] flowers to Mrs. [illegible]

JERRY—What's [illegible]

BISTER—[illegible] Baldwin [illegible]

JERRY—Is Miss Baldwin [illegible]

BISTER—Yes, sir. [illegible]

JERRY—[illegible] Ask her to come up. You [illegible]

[illegible] Mrs. Hillary [illegible]

MRS. HILLARY—[illegible]

[illegible] Baldwin [illegible] Mrs. [illegible]

JERRY—Yes. [illegible]

MRS. HILLARY—[illegible]

JERRY—Damn [illegible]

MRS. HILLARY—What?

JERRY—Beg your pardon [illegible] other.

MRS. HILLARY—Well, [illegible]

JERRY—I don't want [illegible]

MRS. HILLARY—[illegible] rather really? [illegible]

JERRY—I don't want to [illegible] What does he come here for? [illegible] a dressmaking establishment [illegible] tailor's shop.

MRS. HILLARY—[illegible] a very good husband.

JERRY—I'd rather have [illegible] father-in-law, thanks.

MRS. HILLARY—[illegible] the sort of man I'd marry [illegible]

JERRY—Why don't you get a divorce from [illegible] and marry [illegible]

MRS. HILLARY—Divorce Hillary! Lucette, you're fond of Hillar (suspiciously). And you want me to divorce him. That's very strange, Lucette.

Timelock Foams, the Great Detective

The Adventure of the Inanimate Duchess.

I CAME upon Foams peeping through a window [illegible] pered, "look in here and tell me if you observe indications of a horrible crime."

I looked through the window but couldn't see anything indicative of a crime having been committed.

"No," I replied.

"Potson," said Foams, "you are a chump. Follow me. We may be in time to intercept the criminal. Didn't you see the lifeless form of the Duchess on that lounge?"

"But, Foams"——I began.

No use. Foams was dashing around the house toward the door, and I had to follow.

At the entrance a couple of footmen attempted to stop us, but Foams knocked them down with a straight right and left. As we dashed on, we noticed the Duke descending the stairs. A look of surprise came over his face as he saw us, but before he could speak the great detective grasped him by the throat and cooked him into [illegible].

"Come, Potson," said Foams, dragging the Duke along with him, "we will confront him with the body of the young wife whom—my deductions tell me—he murdered in jealous rage."

"But Foams"—I began.

"Try not to be a chump, Potson," answered Foams," but come to the scene of the crime."

[illegible] the great detective kicked in the door of the room in which he had seen the Duchess. As he rushed in, dragging her husband, that beautiful young woman sat up on the lounge, rubbing her eyes.

"What woke me"——she started to say when she caught sight of her husband. "Ooh," she screamed, "is he dead?" And she threw her arms around the Duke's neck, screaming her grief.

"Potson," hissed Foams, "don't stand there like a chump—out of the window!"

We went through the window, sash and all, nor did we stop running until in our modest diggings in Faker street, with the door bolted.

"I knew she was asleep," I said, "for I could see her breathing."

"Potson," said Foams, "you'll never make a detective."

"However," he added, "you're a first-rate chump."

DID YOU KNOW THAT---

It's unlucky to wish too much—just look at what the turkey gets for having a wishbone?

You can always get a new moon for an old one?

If you get tired of writing prose, you can always relax by writing poetry?

A typewriter is better than a pen for writing poetry, because you can start all the lines even?

Even a domino may have a blank expression?

Although the moon stays out nights, she isn't full as often as the sun?

Also the moon is better behaved than the gas which gets lit every night?

The furnace, too, is pretty gay—it goes out many a night?

A rolling stone gathers no moss and, besides, it's very seldom square?

Most people illogically condemn burglars for coming in through their windows while boosting the sun for the same thing?

If a cat had web feet they wouldn't do it a bit of good?

A stork can stand a long time on one leg, but then so can a flagpole?

Primroses aren't to[illegible] and they're no more prim than any other flower?

Sand is a very useful thing on the beach, but it's the dickens in your eye?

Sand is also useful in Sandusky?

Wheels within wheels don't use up so many tires?

A wheelwright can make a wheelbarrow, but he can't always make a wheelbarrow wheel right?

A burlesque wheel isn't funny?

A drawing-card has more drawing power than a drawing-room?

A drawn-room has also more drawing power than most artists?

An oculist is no use to a blind baggage?

GLANCE MUSIC.

TO THE EDITOR—What do you know about "glance music"? The other night I was sitting in a restaurant with a young [illegible] and the orchestra was playing, and she exclaimed, "Ah, the glance music from 'Tristan und Isolde.' They play it every time Tristan looks at Isolde."

"Who plays it?" I asked.

"Why, the musicians," she replied.

"Ah," I responded. "Who told them to play it? I didn't."

And then she suddenly glanced at me, and I felt there was a horrible discord somewhere.

What was the trouble?

WHEN "JACK" BARRY, captain of the Red Sox, went up to his old home in Connecticut after the World's Series, [illegible] into a heated war argument in his father's cafe. A Frenchman, a German, a Russian, an Italian, an American and an Englishman were concerned. The point at issue was the world's greatest navy. The Frenchman had just claimed this honor for his native country, as the others had previously claimed it for theirs. The Italian protested vociferously.

"Siza no count," he cried excitedly. "Frenchman fita lika frog eat. Italia hasa da world's finest [illegible]."

At this point an Irishman, standing by, stepped in.

"Hould on," he said majestically, putting up his hand. "Hould on! I'll sittle this fer ye. Ye're all wrong, me byes, ye're all wrong—ivery mother's son of ye. Shure it's Ireland has the world's most magnificint navy, and long has she bin known as the Quane of the Says."

In the midst of the clamorous protest that greeted this ultimatum the American pointed at Barry and said:

"Here, let this gentleman decide the argument. He's a college man and should know. Tell him the number of ships that each of your countries has and he'll be the referee."

"Now, you first," to the Irishman.

The Irishman, who was a newcomer to town, turned to Barry, glinted at him suspiciously, and then cried:

"Faith, and why should I till the number of ould Ireland's ships to a stranger. How do I know but phat he's a spy."

Filling a Full House

Some Amusing Lines from a Roaring Comedy

ONE of the amusing situations among the many in the roaring comedy, "A Full House," playing at the Plymouth. In the third act Vera, the chorus girl with whom Ned Pembroke [illegible] appears in the [illegible] apartment in New York in search of some letters which Ned had written her and which George Howell had procured from [illegible] the previous night in Boston, and the following lines explain the amusing situation that then occur:

KING (at telephone)—[illegible] Who? [illegible] Vernon? From Boston? Vera Vernon. Send her right up. (Puts down phone. Laughs.) [illegible] Boys are going to have a pleasant afternoon. (Exit.)

OTTILY—[illegible] something wrong [illegible].

HOWELL—But, Ottily, [illegible] you're [illegible].

OTTILY [illegible] tell you I saw it move.

AUNT—[illegible].

HOWELL—Why, you're ill, dear. Auntie, take her up and put her to bed. (Aunt and Ottily exit. Door bell rings.)

HOWELL—Ned, see who is at the door. (Ned opens door and sees Vera.)

NED (to Howell)—Vera.

HOWELL—[illegible] (Vera enters, followed by Mooney, the policeman, and carrying a red rose. They see her.)

VERA—What's your hurry, boys?

HOWELL—Officer, put that woman out.

MOONEY—[illegible] come in, but she can't go out. (Vera throws him the rose. He catches it [illegible] holds it up and kisses it and exits.)

VERA—Well, boys, here I am.

NED—Vera, what [illegible] do you want here?

HOWELL—[illegible] (to Vera) How did you know I lived here?

VERA—Got your card on the plane and found out your address. Oh, boys, don't be harsh. I traveled all the way from Boston just to see you both, and I have traveled quite alone. You know how I hate traveling alone.

NED—You bet I do.

HOWELL—Never mind your preferences [illegible] question for you is [illegible].

VERA—Yes, Cutie.

HOWELL—Don't call me Cutie.

NED—Ha! Ha!

VERA—Shut up, you little slate pencil.

HOWELL—Ha! Ha!

NED—Don't call me a slate pencil.

VERA (to Ned)—You're a nice one, aren't you? Quit me cold and set this little two-for-a-nickel lawyer on my trail!

HOWELL—What's that?

VERA—I'm speaking, Cutie.

HOWELL—Don't call me Cutie.

VERA—And last night you loved [illegible].

HOWELL—Yes, but that was last night.

NED—Now, listen, Vera.

VERA—[illegible] a good [illegible]. Now you [illegible] ever on my [illegible] I framed it to have my letters stolen by [illegible] comical lawyer.

HOWELL—Comical!

Howell—"You haven't a leg to stand on." Vera (raising her skirt)—What? No?

NED—Your letters!

VERA—[illegible] You wrote them [illegible] outpourings of your mushy little soul.

HOWELL—Classics.

VERA—Not much as literature, but valuable to me as evidence. Now then, I want them back!

HOWELL—Sorry, dear lady, but your evidence is now in ashes.

VERA—You burnt them?

HOWELL—I did.

VERA—Well, I'll be—— (Howell puts his hand over her mouth.)

HOWELL—No [illegible] I get down to [illegible].

NED—[illegible] Vera. [illegible]

VERA—Scene's set, boys; ring up.

NED—[illegible]

HOWELL—[illegible] of the New York bar.

VERA—[illegible] New York [illegible]

HOWELL—That will do for you. I am going to point out to you your dangerous position. You are here with the sole intention of extorting money from this innocent young man.

VERA—Innocent? Ha!

HOWELL—Are you aware, young woman, what the term "blackmail" means?

VERA—Sure I am. If you fall down on it, it means the Island. But if you put it over [illegible] will yet——

HOWELL—What evidence you had is now destroyed. We can beat you on every count. Believe me, my dear young siren, you haven't a leg to stand on.

VERA (lifting her skirt)—No? [illegible] do you think, Nippers?

NED—I can't remember.

HOWELL—Good! Now you go quietly and [illegible] let you off [illegible].

NED—That's [illegible] Vera [illegible] You are going to get us in a lot of trouble [illegible].

HOWELL—I'm sorry, [illegible] brought this on yourself [illegible]. Will you go?

NED (anxiously)—[illegible]

VERA—Oh, go to [illegible].

NED—What?

HOWELL—What?

VERA—Nice little [illegible] wifey in?

HOWELL—No [illegible].

NED—His wife's in Europe.

VERA—Oh, grand! [illegible] take [illegible].

HOWELL—No, you don't take her room.

NED—Now see here, Vera, you've got to get out of here. You [illegible].

VERA—Can it, Nippers. Why didn't you come to me like a man and say "I'm tired of you, Vera. I'm in love with another woman?"

NED—I'm not!

HOWELL—Of course he's not.

VERA—You are. You, to whom I've given the best three months of my life. You, on whom I've squandered my [illegible] the [illegible] blessings of a yearning heart—the comforts of a happy home.

HOWELL—Oh, stop [illegible] on!

VERA—You call it acting [illegible].

NED—Yes. Bum [illegible].

VERA—Let me tell you something, Nippers, and you, too, Cutie. [illegible] my poor bruised heart.

OTTILY (off [illegible]) [illegible] there?

VERA—A woman's voice.

HOWELL—Nobody.

VERA—Nobody.

OTTILY (still off stage)—[illegible]

HOWELL—Yes, dar[illegible] busy. Quite busy.

VERA—Ah, when [illegible] (Vera starts to go up the stairs. Ned grabs her, pushes her on to the [illegible] with a sofa pillow.)

NED—Shut up!

HOWELL (whispering)—Don't talk to her. Choke her.

OTTILY (outside)—But who's with you? I heard a woman's voice.

HOWELL—She's not. She's a man—a client. I assure you she's not a woman. (Aside.) She's a vampire!

NED (holding Vera)—George, you go to Ottily. I'll manage her.

"Well, what kind of football has he taught Rutgers?" persisted Sanford. "[illegible] won a number of games. What's his system?"

"Oh, it's the typical Sanford system," replied Sinnott. "All offence, and no defence."

Owen Moran, one of the greatest little ringmen England ever produced, happened to be in New Haven that night, and meeting Johnston and learning the object of his visit, Owen volunteered to second Jimmy's fighter.

Owen had never seen the big fellow in action and Jimmy did not explain his man's weakness. Laughs for the New Year

Resolutions

By BERTON BRALEY

I SWORE I would quit misbehaving myself—
That I wouldn't go out with the gang,
That I'd give up my fun and just hustle forself
And let all good fellows go hang.
But I somehow fell in with my cronies last night
And I got home this morning at ten;
I'd sworn off forever—your surmise is right—
But I'll probably do it again,
Oh Yes,
I doubtless will do it again!

A beautiful lady once jilted me flat
And slipped me the mitten for fair;
I swore I would nevermore love after that,
I'd mope through the world in despair.
But maidens are many and maidens are sweet,
I love and I'm jilted, and then,
I swear it's a thing I will never repeat
But I'll probably do it again.
Sure thing,
I'll certainly do it again!

This tale is a tale that has often been told,
This sentiment's limping and lame;
The central idea of these verses is old,
But I'm hoping they'll "go" just the same.
I've written stuff like 'em some hundreds of times
And sold it to gather the yen,
And if I get by with this parcel of rhymes
I'll probably do it again,
Of course,
I'll certainly do it again!

[illegible] people filling bottles from barrels and pasting labels on them [illegible] a great deal of "old vintage" will be purchased on New Year's Eve.

A person start out on New Year's Eve with a wad of confetti [illegible] cow bell and some ticklers, it is a sign he doesn't have to think for a living.

A man walk bravely past a bright, cheerful corner cafe where he was wont to place one foot merrily on the rail, it is a sign he won't go in there for two or three days.

A man who looks [illegible] you go honking past in a big car, it is a sign he is the waiter who got your $5 tip on New Year's Eve.

A man go away [illegible] side street where he isn't known, and take a few drinks and smoke four cigars, it is a sign he has resolved not to drink or smoke [illegible] 1916.

Made Over to Fit the New Year.

LOOKS like a scrappy New Year over in Europe.

Money talks and [illegible] Eve it says, "Pop"
Little jabs of lobster,
Wine both white and red,
Make a Happy New Year
And an awful head!

Mary had a little diary
And she wrote each day, forsooth,
No, she did not fear to lose it
For she never wrote the truth.

[illegible] but fearing so many [illegible]

[illegible] supposed to know [illegible] but most of us simply owe a lot more.

There was a man in our town
Who felt so wond'rous wise,
He thought that he could open wine
Just like the reg'lar guys.

He gave the cork a fearful yank,
A thing you'd not believe,
And next he knew a quart of wine
Went sizzling up his sleeve.

The man who straps himself on the wagon will never [illegible] choke to death.

Good resolutions, now and then,
Are broken by the most of men.

Father Time doesn't carry a stem winder, but [illegible] the same.

Lives of great men all remind us"—
Never mind that ancient rhyme—
We'll leave everything behind us
When we meet old Father Time.

Don't Strike That Helpless House Fly.

In the everglades of Harlem, where a lot of folkses dwell,
A loving husband found his flat, and thereinto he fell.
Bravely he struggled to his feet, and as he squared away
He saw a sight which froze his blood upon that Winter day.
His fair young wife whom he had wed in Minneapolis, Minn.,
Was striking at a house fly with a hardwood rolling pin.
He gazed at her moment, then a sob convulsed his frame.
And this quick exclamation he did feelingly exclaim:

REFRAIN

Don't strike that helpless house fly,
Whatsoever else you do!
Perhaps he has a wife at home,
And little children, too!
When first I gazed into your eyes
You wouldn't hurt a flea;
If you would keep my honest love
Let that there house fly be!"

II.

The fair wife paused a moment, with surprise her lips did part;
The grand truth dawned upon her that her husband had a heart.
"My noble man!" she whispered, teardrops in her eyes so blue,
"I guess I'll spare that house fly, but I'll take one swipe at you!"
Upon his unprotected bean that rolling pin did fall—
A trick that she had learned in Minneapolis and St. Paul.
The house fly thanked that husband and skedaddled on its way
To tell the little house flies of the words that he did say.

REFRAIN

Don't strike that helpless house fly," etc.

How to Have Health and Muscles Like Mine

Press Your Arms Down Hard on Your Hips, and Pull Back Your Shoulders While Skating, Says Willard.

SKATING on ice, as I said in my previous article, is one of the most beneficial sports known, but there are certain rules of dress in connection with it that must be observed to make this sport safe and healthful.

The rules I speak of are the rules of dress. In no other branch of athletic sport is it so easy to take cold as with ice skating, and although this sounds strange colds are more easily "caught" in rink than in skating outdoors.

The reason for this is plain to anybody who has investigated the subject. A rink has doors and windows. That means it, like all other rinks, has draughts. It is also kept comparatively warm for the comfort of the skaters, but the air is necessarily made damp by the ice. Here is a very dangerous combination for the person with weak lungs, or the skater who dresses foolishly for rink skating.

I show to-day on this page pictures of girls dressed for ice skating. One has a rink costume and the other one for outdoors. You will notice very little difference in the make-ups with the exception of the neck covering.

This is because the covering of the neck and throat is perhaps the most important part of an ice skater's dress as far as physical health is concerned.

The person, man or woman, who wears a muffler in a rink is courting cold in the chest or throat. Wear a muffler TO the rink, if you like, but as soon as you get inside take it off. Take off your coat also. When you stop skating and you are heated, throw the coat around you immediately, and when I say "immediately" I mean it. Don't stand around talking for a few moments, but grab your coat first thing and put it around your shoulders.

What I am trying to put before you is that you should at all times try to keep your body at an even temperature and protect it against draughts. A draught in an ice rink is just about twice as dangerous as a draught anywhere else.

When you are outdoors you need an even temperature all the time. You will, of course, want to wrap up well, but always have a coat ready to put on when you stop skating. Don't walk home in the same costume that you have worn to skate in—that is to say, always have something in addition to throw over you.

I cannot advise girls too strongly to wear heavy underwear when ice skating. Ice skating in rinks is conducive to colds in the abdominal region unless the skater is protected by underclothing of the proper weight and texture. So don't let your taste for new styles make you foolish to this extent.

As for points on skating itself, I have a very few more to give my readers. You will remember that last week I told you how to hold your hands behind you but did not illustrate it in pictures. Today I am showing you how the hands should be clasped.

Of course, I do not mean that you should lean as far forward as I am doing. I am bending to an extreme in the picture because I want to impress a point upon you. When you skate with your hands clasped behind your back don't clasp them listlessly but press your arms down so that they are rigid all the time.

This tends to pull your shoulders back and make them broad. It also allows you the full benefit of all your lung power. Try as hard as you can to confine your breathing through the nostrils. At first it may be hard, but, as the old adage goes, "if at first you don't succeed, try, try, try again."

Next week's Willard article will be devoted to exercises for reducing the hips, abdomen and other parts of the body to their proper proportions.

PUTS WILLARD ARTICLES ON THE BULLETIN BOARD IN SACRAMENTO SCHOOL

Mr. Jess Willard.

Sir—Your answer to my question on rubdown was in last Sunday's paper. I certainly thank you for your favor.

Your articles are doing an immense amount of good, and especially among our boys, who have had a taste of physical training.

Every week I put your article on our bulletin board, and many boys see the articles that they are unable to get at home.

I trust in time we will see a book by you along these lines. I feel sure it would be very helpful and instructive to the young and old of our land.

With every good wish for your continued health and good work,

ALBERT L. GOLDSMITH,
Hygienic and Physical Training Instructor, Sacramento High School, Sacramento, Cal., Dec. 7, 1915.

Answers to Willard Readers

CHARLES WARNER, Brooklyn, N. Y.—My boy, my advice to you is to get another position. At your age that ought to be easy. Get into an office where the surroundings are more suited to you. All the courage in the world won't do you much good against a lot of overgrown bullies like those you write about.

MRS. A. ROTH, San Francisco, Cal.—Keep up that bending exercise that you speak about, and try not to mind the little pain in the cords of your legs. If you keep up this exercise the pain will soon go away. You will find this exercise excellent for a cure of the rheumatism in your back and shoulders. In fact, I can think of no better cure for your case.

D. DUNSEY, St. John, New Brunswick—Your complaint is a very natural one and often suffered by growing boys. The pains come from a stretching of the chest muscles and are absolutely nothing to worry about. You will find that boxing, if you are able to indulge in it, will stop them from coming on. Or a dumbbell exercise, where you throw your arms out wide, which will develop the small muscles across your chest so that they will not bother you in the future, would be a good thing. Your physical build is excellent. You should grow up to be an extraordinarily strong man. [illegible] keep up your good habits.

WALTER F. COGGINS, Schenectady, N. Y.—Write me another letter telling me your age and your occupation. Also something about your weight and general habits and I will try to advise you.

[illegible], New Haven, Conn.—[illegible] glad to respect your wishes by [illegible] publishing your name [illegible] [illegible] pair of [illegible] [illegible] you have [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] especially [illegible] you are athletic [illegible] girls would [illegible] [illegible] keep it up and you will stay young [illegible] looks long after [illegible] glad girl of your age [illegible]

N. M. R., San Francisco, Cal.—You [illegible] write me [illegible] if you want an answer.

HOTEL MARTINIQUE

The Inside of the Hotel

Is the part that counts with the guest. The architect doesn't make a hotel, he only designs it. The builder doesn't make a hotel, he only builds it.

Don't select your stopping place from the outside. Look behind the front wall and see what is back of it.

The success of the Hotel Martinique is the personality back of it, which shows in the lobby, at the desk, in the restaurants and in the rooms.

The telephone attendants, the mail clerks, the room maids, even the bellboys reflect the personality back of the "House of Taylor." We don't preach prices only. We have pleasant, homelike rooms from $1.50 up

In one and all you will find reflected the careful and insistent idea of guest-service that dominates every moment of your stay

Located in the Heart of Things, only a golf stroke from the Pennsylvania Depot. On Broadway's throbbing centre. The Martinique is the logical New York home for those on business or pleasure bent.

Cause and Effect

BOSTON is radically different from every other city socially and commercially; we have an individuality all our own.

Sentiment and tradition play an important part in our every day affairs, and anything that becomes linked up with that sentiment and tradition and is "taken home" must have exceptional merit.

Consider our evening papers, for instance. There are SIX of them and—the Boston Evening American not only has a greater net paid circulation than any of the other evening papers, but has a greater net paid circulation than all the other Boston evening papers COMBINED. And the Boston Sunday American has the greatest net paid Sunday circulation in New England.

Now that means something to you as a reader, as an advertiser. That means that the Boston American is possessed of exceptional merit, that people buy it because they like it—have faith in it.

The Boston American—Evening and Sunday—is "taken home" by Bostonians. Its enormous net paid circulation proves it conclusively.

It is very easy to understand why the Boston American is "taken home" why it has a quantity and quality circulation.

People want to read articles on European affairs by such noted men as Maurice Maeterlinck, Lord Derby, General Henri de Lacroix, Guglielmo Ferrero, Hilaire Belloc and Stephen Pichon.

Is it not natural for them to want to read absorbing tales by such noted authors as E. Phillips Oppenheim and George Pattullo? Can you blame them for devoting the evening hours to the study of fashions as portrayed by Lucile (Lady Duff Gordon), and Valentine de Saint-Point, or the society notes by The Dowager?

In the Boston American they can see the work of such noted cartoonists as Tom Powers, Tad, George McManus, Hoban, Sterrett, McNamara, and, last but not least, Winsor McCay. And don't overlook Walter Camp, "Chick" Evans and "Rabbit" Maranville on sports.

No wonder the Boston American Evening and Sunday—is New England's Greatest Home Newspaper. In no other Boston paper can you find such a wealth of interesting and instructive reading matter such a list of gifted contributors.

And all of this in addition to the quickest, the best, the clearest presentation of all the news.

The Result? A greater net paid evening circulation than all the other Boston evening papers combined, and the greatest net paid Sunday circulation in New England.

N. B.---This friendliness of Bostonians for the Boston American is something which should be uppermost in the minds of advertisers—it is an asset of large proportions.

WONDERFUL ADVANCE IN AUTOS REVEALED AT SHOW

Achievements That Were Mere Dreams Only Two Short Years Ago Were Fully Realized at New York Demonstration; Marvelous Triumphs Follow Patience of the Auto Engineer Genius

New York, Jan. 8.—Significant developments in the [illegible] world became [illegible] observer at the Grand Central Palace this week.

The manufacture of automobiles is an infant industry. It has hardly reached its fifteenth birthday. Therefore it cannot stand still. It must go forward or backwards and since there is no hint of the latter, it must be progressing.

And it is progressing. This past year has seen practical developments of what amounted to nothing more than hopes but two short years ago. Achievements which are marvels in themselves and which at the same may only represent small details of manufacture have been made and the result is that never before could the purchaser buy so good a car for so little [illegible]

IMPORTANT DEVELOPMENTS

These developments [illegible] at the show. They were not all on one [illegible]. A point here and another there all lent their aid to swell the [illegible] of improvement and refinement which go to make the 1916 car the most efficient vehicle which was ever put at the disposal of man. At the exhibition the X-ray was turned on the finished product and as the jeweler proudly displays his tray of brilliant gems, the automobile industry proudly spread before the public the finished product of the concentrated genius of the automobile engineer.

The motor is always the focal point of interest. It is the heart and soul of the car and everything is dependent upon it. It did not take a survey of many cars to bring home the fact that the block-cast motor in which the cylinders were combined in one unit is a very outstanding feature design. In fact the effort to combine the units which go to make up the power plant into one comprehensive whole formed the first interesting point to study.

This unit construction includes not only the motor but the clutch and what is commonly known as the transmission, or gear box. It goes further than this, even, and includes parts of the motor that were formerly left exposed, the intake and exhaust manifolds. The valve actions are covered by light removable plates and the result is that the exterior is left simple and clean, giving an appearance of accessibility and substantialness, which is decidedly attractive.

On the whole, the person who desires to compare figures found that motors are smaller than they were a year ago. The bore and stroke are less, and therefore [illegible] power for [illegible] year ago [illegible] is overcome [illegible] motors of today [illegible] than they were [illegible] operated at higher rotative speed. More power is secured for less displacement.

This is accomplished by larger valves, lighter [illegible] the motor and in the better designing of the parts which have to do with the carburetion. The diameter of the valve is generally a given proportion of the cylinder diameter or the bore.

The fact that the bore has fallen off and the [illegible] to allow [illegible] the cylinder [illegible] increases the power in two ways.

First there is a [illegible] relative amount of explosive mixture, and secondly the motor can rotate more rapidly before the power begins to drop because of the fact that the gases cannot be drawn rapidly enough through the valve passages. Engineers express this by stating that the volumetric efficiency of the 1916 motor is higher than that of the 1915.

LIGHTER RECIPROCATING PARTS.

Lighter reciprocating parts refer to the connecting rods and pistons. These have been cut down in weight by many of the leading manufacturers and others are using aluminum alloys. The aluminum piston was one of the features noted at the automobile show. Where it was not used it was interesting to study how the designers have cut down weight by a scientific arrangement of the material.

Carburetion parts which have had a significant part in increasing the efficiency of the 1916 motor not only include the carburetor itself, but the mounting of the instrument, the cast [illegible] block manifold and the pre-heated air all help.

Carburetors are now able to readily handle the poor grade of fuel that is now being supplied without choking when the throttle is opened. The carbureter is mounted closer to the motor and does not give the gasoline opportunity to recondense before entering the cylinder and the cast in manifold keeps the gases warm and perfectly vaporized. The tendency to keep the intake manifold as short as possible on many of the [illegible] was noted at the show.

12 Cylinder Car as Low as $1,050

Six of These 'Twelves' Developed Since Last Show Shows Rapid Srtides in the Auto Industry

[illegible] twelves [illegible] so far [illegible] Two years ago [illegible] possible to get a car with half the number of cylinders [illegible] equipment for that price.

If it was possible during the past year to cut into the twelve cylinder [illegible] so deeply when at the beginning of the year there were none on the market at all, it would not be safe to predict what new developments this infantry industry will put forth during the coming twelve months. There have already been suggestions of sixteen and twenty-four cylinder cars, but these have never gone past the idle [illegible] stage. In fact, it is difficult to conceive of either of these [illegible] during the coming year.

EXCELLENT QUALITIES

One of the greatest achievements of the twelve-cylinder and eight-cylinder motors is the setting up of a standard of performance as a target for the manufacturers of fours and sixes to shoot at. The result is that better performance is being secured from cars with fewer cylinders simply because it has become necessary for makers to meet the excellent qualities found in the motors with a greater number of cylinders.

To do the same work as the twelve with half or one-third the number of cylinders is a difficult task for the designer, but some wonderful acceleration figures have been obtained from sixes and fours during the past few months which may well make the twelve-cylinder manufacturers look to their laurels in this respect.

NEAT WIRING NOTED.

The neat wiring secured on the twelve-cylinder motors, in spite of the large number of cylinders, is a feature which should be noted. In fact, the ingenious placing of all the accessories on a motor with this number of units is a matter which is worthy of much commendation. It is certainly a useful argument in combatting the arguments generally advanced against the twelve—that there is too much complication.

Arguments along this line need not disturb the designer as practically every bit of progress in automobile design has been opposed at the time of introduction by a number of people who have raised the cry of complication. The six-cylinder motor is an example of this. Now there are as many makers of sixes as there are of fours, and the number of makers of eight-cylinder cars is greater than of fours in certain price zones around $2,000. The twelve has, in all probability, its own field, and this being so, it has come to stay.

RECORD SALES OF AUTOMOBILES AT NEW YORK'S MARVELOUS SHOW

Greatest Industrial Exhibit of Modern Times Illustrates That Most Intensive Effort, Skill and Organization Have Made the "Plaything" of Yesterday the Necessity of Today—The Motor

By J. C. KERRISON

New York, Jan. 8.—This evening witnessed the close of the greatest industrial exhibit known to modern times, the New York motor show.

It was a dress parade of all that is best in motor construction. A parade emphasizing to a degree the greatness of the industry, and the absolute transition of the motor car from an experimental to the practical stage. Not that the industry or the product has for the last few years been anything experimental in character, but that all traces of the experimental tendencies had been removed. It is really surprising how [illegible] and steadily the public interest has been held by the motor exhibits from year to year and in the past one has been inclined to prophecy that the life of the industry would, judging from then existing conditions, last over a period of a certain number of years. That was in the past. Today the unanimous belief is that the life of the motor industry is immeasurable, that it will be flourishing when the humans now interested therein have passed away.

Joins Ranks of Retail Exhibits.

The exhibit was a most impressive and educational one, and from the opening to its closing played to standing-room-only crowds. In the days of 1906, when it was generally conceded that the motor industry had reached its height, and the car had established itself as a necessity, the attendance and the number of sales was remarkable. Since then it has steadily increased until today every one identified with the industry is a dyed-in-the-wool optimist. Optimism, absolute confidence in future successes were everywhere noticeable. So strong was this spirit that men identified with other lines were stricken with the fever and went away satisfied that the coming year is to be the greatest in the history of the American business world.

The New York show this year has a right to be considered as having joined the ranks of the retail exhibits. Heretofore this show has been considered as a wholesale show, where dealers and sub-dealers went to secure the lines they would handle. The dealer was there and so was the sub-dealer, but instead of applying themselves to a solution of the agency problem they devoted their time and attention to the retail [illegible]. The results being that there were more motor cars sold at retail than in any previous New York exhibit. The volume of sales was immense and only serves to convince the makers and dealers that during this year the sales will be at least [illegible] per cent greater than were the sales of 1915, when no less than 981,168 motor vehicles were sold, the retail value of which was approximately $691,[illegible]. The manufacturers are confident that production for 1916 will exceed 1,200,000 motor cars, truly a great volume of business. Their prediction, however, finds substantiation in the plans of the greater number of manufacturers, all of whom are to materially increase the volume of their product, and, what is more to the point, are evidently, judging from the exhibits made, endeavoring to build a better car than ever.

The show itself brought out very few things that were absolutely new in motor construction. There were some, however, which had a tendency to develope along lines which have not been thoroughly explored, but previously been considered. The keynote was evidently better car construction. By a close analysis of the various exhibits one was inclined to feel that the automobile makers are endeavoring to follow along the logical course of car development, with the idea of producing the best possible.

In all the exhibits there were indications of this, and after a thorough inspection of the show, one came to believe the idea that in the matter of bodies a great effort has been made to produce easier riding and more appropriate design of bodies to the duties the car is to perform. Harmonious body designs were noticed everywhere, and there seemed to be a tendency toward the use of smaller wheels.

In engines the desire was evident to give more power per pound, with a wider speed range, and a more uniform speed with less fuel consumption was everywhere noticed, more this year than ever, owing, perhaps, to the rapid increase in the price of gasoline.

There was an overabundance of interchangeable bodies so that one chasis could be made to use in both Winter and Summer driving, and in this certain manufacturers have made remarkable strides of progress, the additions to the open bodies being made in so thorough a manner as to make it almost impossible on the first examination to determine whether the adjustable top were a permanent feature or not.

Eight and Ten Cylinder Cars.

Perhaps the most noticeable feature of this year's show, aside from the general reduction of prices, is the remarkable increase in the number of eight and twelve cylinder cars exhibited. Last year fours or sixes attracted the general attention. This year it seems to be the case of eights or twelves, both of which had their supporters among the leaders of the industry.

Bodies are lighter this year, thus allowing motors to accomplish more on the hills. The wide use of aluminum has contributed much toward lightening these bodies. In fact, manufacturers are using this metal in various parts of the car to a greater extent than ever before.

There was a noticeable increase in the use of wire wheels, the number shown being at least [illegible] per cent greater than was seen at the show a year ago. The success of wire wheels has been fully demonstrated, not only in touring but likewise in racing, and according to Mr. Houck, the wire wheel expert of the country, the time is not far distant when wire wheels will be standard equipment.

MORE COMFORT AND LUXURY IN 1916 MODELS

Scientific Spring Work in Upholstery Forms Best Kind of Shock Absorber, Is Discovered

It is [illegible] which make [illegible] easy [illegible] upholstery [illegible] heated [illegible] spring suspension [illegible] absorbing [illegible] inequalities [illegible] nine-tenths [illegible] ary, it will have to be a very severe shock be[illegible] a sensation [illegible]

This year [illegible] mobiles have [illegible] on body con[illegible] upholstery, the softness of the leather fabrics and the beauty of the tufting combine to give [illegible] cars an air of [illegible] and distinction that bespeak luxury at the first glance.

The beauty of the upholstery is more than [illegible] covering of leather [illegible] there is an arrangement of [illegible] constructed coil springs which forms the best kind of a shock absorber. In the cars with particularly good upholstery there is a differential spring arrangement in which the easy shocks are absorbed by light springs, and as soon as the capacity of these has been exceeded heavier springs take up the work which is more severe.

SLIGHTLY LARGER BODY.

The way in which the upholstery has been carried up to the sides of the car is also very interesting, and gives the bodies a finish which falls very gracefully into line with the straight-line design now accepted by many makers. In fact the straight-line car of to[illegible] is more nearly a true stream[illegible] than the much talked of stream-line type of 1914 and 191[illegible]

The width of the front and rear seats have been increased one or two inches on a great many cars. The distance of the seat from the cowl in front, or from [illegible] to the front seat in the rear [illegible] has been increased, giving a [illegible] larger body.

The weight of the body is no greater on the whole, because what has been taken up by giving the driver and passengers more room has been gained by shorter [illegible] assemblies and a neater forward arrangement which has permitted the shortening of the hood. This gives more body room on the same wheel base. With improved construction [illegible] which bodies are [illegible] fewer parts, weight has [illegible] ease.

In beautifying the front compartment of the [illegible] and at the same time increasing [illegible] two important developments have been under way. [illegible] instrument board [illegible] in 1913, [illegible] front seat, [illegible] from Europe.

These arrangements [illegible] forward part of the car are largely responsible for the [illegible] of the driving [illegible] date design. The instrument board which is now a neat [illegible] on many of the cars [illegible] of very elaborate [illegible] the automobile show discloses [illegible] very finely polished specimens of walnut.

The divided front seat permits a passenger to pass from the driver's seat back to the tonneau without stopping the car and walking around the outside, or doing a rather acrobatic stunt and climbing over. Experts agree that it is impossible to do the latter gracefully.

WIDE DOORS IN BIG CARS.

Wider doors are used, both in the rear and in the front end of the touring car. Where it was necessary to squeeze through the earlier models of tonneau door, it will not be necessary to do so in any of the 1916 cars. The doors themselves are better made, being arranged with anti-rattling devices and having concealed hinges which do not break into the continuous lines of the body.

The yacht-line body is with us in greater numbers at this show than in previous years. It can be distinguished by the boat-like curve of the upper body line. The rear of the body slopes back, giving at the rear extremity what yachtsmen call tumble home. It is to be doubted whether this boat-like design gives as good an appearance on the whole as the straight line.

Straight lines [illegible] speed and even in yacht design the faster craft have generally been laid out with straight lines as much as possible.

The great variety of closed cars at remarkably low prices is one of the features of the year's development. Some of these are now to be had at prices at which [illegible] buy touring [illegible] Coupes and [illegible] demand and [illegible] signs in these [illegible] Exterior coachwork [illegible] has been improved this year.

Hudson Super Six

Hudson Super six, listing at $1,375

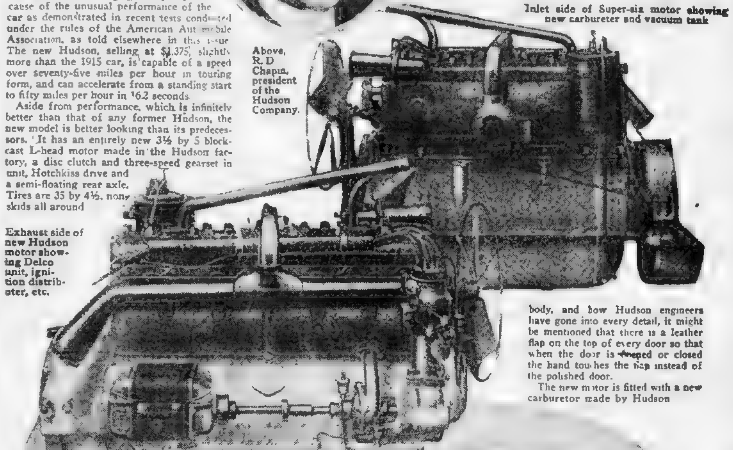
SUPER SIX is the model name by which the 1916 Hudson is known, this name being given partly because of the unusual performance of the car as demonstrated in recent tests conducted under the rules of the American Automobile Association, as told elsewhere in this issue. The new Hudson, selling at $1,375, slightly more than the 1915 car, is capable of a speed over seventy-five miles per hour in touring form, and can accelerate from a standing start to fifty miles per hour in 16.2 seconds.

Aside from performance, which is infinitely better than that of any former Hudson, the new model is better looking than its predecessors. It has an entirely new 3½ by 5 block-cast L-head motor made in the Hudson factory, a disc clutch and three-speed gearset in unit, Hotchkiss drive and a semi-floating rear axle. Tires are 35 by 4½, non-skids all around.



Inlet side of Super-six motor showing new carbureter and vacuum tank

Exhaust side of new Hudson motor showing Delco unit, ignition distributer, etc.

The striking changes, which will be apparent to the average observer, are those concerning the body, which is a new double-cowl type fitted with a slanting windshield. The line from the windshield to the radiator is almost parallel with the ground. The radiator is a new one, high and narrow, fashioned on the lines of the racing car coolers. To show the care taken in the design of the new body, and how Hudson engineers have gone into every detail, it might be mentioned that there is a leather flap on the top of every door so that when the door is opened or closed the hand touches the flap instead of the polished door.

The new motor is fitted with a new carburetor made by Hudson

KING DEALERS MAKE RESOLVES

"Not to Throw Dust in the Other Fellow's Face" Is One.

New Year's resolutions have been adopted by dealers of the King Motor Car Company throughout the country.

The resolutions are easy to keep, according to the King automobile men. Many owners of King automobiles are also adopting them.

Here are some of the new resolutions:

1. Not to throw dust in the other fellow's face. This can be [illegible] at go[illegible] [illegible] outdistancing him, at the same time staying within the speed limit.

2. Not to draw away from the curb without giving proper signal to those approaching from the rear.

3. Not to "cut in" in front of a car going in the same direction within a distance of 100 feet.

4. To carry skid chains always in the car and put them on whenever wet weather makes it necessary, in order to safeguard the l[illegible]

MANY 8-CYLINDER CARS AT SHOW

A great many eight cylinder cars were at the show and the way in [illegible] the [illegible] ments which formed an interesting point to study. The cylinders of the eight are invariably cast in two groups of four set in the form of a V. At the centre of the V are the [illegible] the carbureter and varying [illegible] ents of accessories, such as the generator and ignition attachments, according to the particular make of motor.

Own 2,200,000 Autos in U. S.; Million More New Ones This Year

Big Drop in Prices Factor in Popularizing Cars All Over the Country; Output Increasing.

"Automobiles are so cheap today that no one can afford to be without one," said a leading manufacturer the other day, and that is the literal truth.

One fact that no one can overlook is that good, practical cars can be purchased for from $500 to $1,000. of a car is $814.

This is the reason that over 2,200,000 cars are registered in this country, and that nearly [illegible]00,000 cars were built and sold last year.

That the motor car is no longer a luxury but a necessity is indicated by the fact that one family out of every twenty-one in this country owns a car today, and this proportion will be increased this year through the building and marketing of over one million new cars.

So far as motors are concerned, they are all good and efficient, whether on a $500 car or a machine of the $5,000 and over class, and no one thinks any longer of wondering whether a car will run or do the work. They know it will.

The ordinary owner will not take care of his car, and what a wonderful amount of abuse a car will stand is [illegible] the way the average automobile is abused by its owner. So to-day it can be said to be practically [illegible]

HOW PRICES TUMBLED

How the price of automobiles has come down in the past few years is [illegible] stated by the fact that the price [illegible] car ten years ago was $2,500 or more, while today the average price of a car is $814.

[illegible] it is true that the war has brought about certain conditions in the automobile industry which to a certain extent have hampered the manufacturers of motor vehicles, nevertheless, in spite of this the buyer of a 1916 car will get more for his money than ever has been the case in the past.

While it is true that the demand for steel copper, iron and other materials to be made into munitions has raised the price of raw material and brought about conditions making it difficult for motor car manufacturers to secure delivery of the raw or partly machined material, nevertheless such remarkable strides have been made in other directions that this extra expense is more than compensated.

INCREASING OUTPUT.

The majority of the factories have installed recently much new labor-saving machinery, and in increasing their outputs have been able to produce better cars or better parts at lower cost, even though the cost of the raw product has come somewhat higher.

The parts makers are able to deliver complete assemblies to makers of assembled cars far more expeditiously cheaper and of better quality in many cases than heretofore. Never in the world's history has there been such a popularizing of a complicated structure as that which the automobile industry has given us. Never before has such a multitude [illegible] ments been crowded into a few short years and even a few short months.

BODIES OF CONCRETE FOR FRENCH AUTOS

Concrete motor cars are the latest invention of a French carriage maker. The concrete differs in [illegible] from that used for ordinary purposes by having a large percentage of cork substituted for gravel. The body is made by placing a metal form over the wooden trestle, with a small space between. A mixture, composed of plastic amalgam of concrete and the ground cork is poured into this space. The finished product is said to be even lighter than wood.

MOTOR MAKERS FOR SAFETY FIRST

Will Work With Other Organizations in Movement to Reduce Accidents.

The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce Safety First Committee, with J. Walter Drake of Detroit as chairman, will aid the movement to safeguard workers in automobile factories by the application of protective devices to dangerous machinery and co-operate with safety first organisations seeking to reduce the number of highway accidents.

Education of the public in the ways to avoid accidents through talks in public schools and by special articles will be offered, as reports of the New York Police Department show that 90 per cent. of street accidents are due to carelessness of pedestrians and children playing in the street.

While automobile drivers, as a class, are the most careful users of the streets, there are a few reckless owners and chauffeurs who discredit the rest. The manufacturers will lend moral support to severe prosecution of such offenders and against speeding, cut-outs and useless horn blowing, which frighten people.

Contrary to general opinion, speed and recklessness are not principal causes of accidents. Of 3,339 persons struck by vehicles of all kinds in New York City during June, July and August, 737, or more than 20 per cent., were struck by horse-drawn trucks and wagons, whose ordinary speed is only four or five miles an hour and which never exceeded ten or twelve miles. And of 1,084 persons struck by vehicles in August, only four were struck by automobiles as a result of speeding, and but one as a result of recklessness of the driver.

Attempt will be made, however, to have the ninety-six leading automobile manufacturing companies embraced in the N. A. C. C. membership conduct a campaign of education among purchasers of their cars and trucks.

REDUCE PRICE OF OVERLAND CAR TO $695

Tremendous Output of Model 83-B During Year Leads to $55 Saving to the Buyer.

A reduction of $55 in the price of the big $[illegible] Overland is the most startling announcement made by John N. Willys, president of the Willys-Overland Company of Toledo.

[illegible] model which in the last six months has broken all sales records for Overland cars. Since June [illegible] of them have been sold [illegible] of the world, but in spite [illegible] that it has been the biggest seller of the year in its class, the Toledo concern now is able to [illegible] improvements at $695. [illegible] position only through a combination of circumstances which have placed [illegible] position where it can offer more car for less money than probably any other concern in the industry.

Due to the foresight and keen business [illegible] Mr. Willys, the materials [illegible] Overland cars this year were bought before the war sent prices soaring. To gain some idea of what this means, it is stated that the company has been able to save three and one-half million dollars on aluminum, [illegible] while the saving on steel and many other raw materials is in proportion.

Quantity production is another factor that figures largely in the reduced price [illegible] additional [illegible] enabled the company to more than treble its output of a year ago. In the last few months more cars have been delivered than during any previous year in the history of the Toledo concern.

Production capacity has jumped to a thousand cars a day and Overland officials declare it is due to savings on [illegible] economies [illegible] lower the price of this model to a point which no other manufacturer of medium-priced cars can touch.

As evidence of the wonderful value offered in the car the Willys-Overland Company guarantees that its price will never be lowered. On the other hand it reserves the right to advance the price [illegible] continue [illegible]

FIRM ANNOUNCES TWO NEW TIRES

Usco and Royal Cord Names of New Line of United States Tire Company.

At the Detroit convention of United States Tire Salesmen, just held in the great Morgan & Wright factory, two new United States Tires were announced, the "Usco" and the "Royal Cord."

The new "Usco" tread tire represents a sensational improvement in tires selling at very moderate prices. The full importance of this improvement will be immediately realized.

In the new "Usco" tread, a practically perfect union has been accomplished between the fabric and the rubber. The plys of the fabric are absolutely unified by rubber joined to the fabric with strength hitherto unknown.

For years and years tire makers have attempted to give the rubber [illegible] the tire composite strength. In "Usco" tread this has been accomplished.

The "Royal Cord" is a cord tire [illegible] at a fair price and completes the line, so that today United States Tire salesmen have the good fortune of being able to offer their trade a complete line of individual tires.

JACKSON EIGHTS SHOW UP STRONG

Company's Line Includes Two Eights and a Four, All with High Duty Motors.

That the Jackson Automobile Company has jumped into the "Eight" field with both feet—and two mighty good feet at that—is indicated by the fact that it offers the public the choice of two eight-cylinder models and so far is the only manufacturer producing eights at different prices, viz: $1,195 and $1,685 respectively. These two models are in addition to the Jackson "34"—a four-cylinder car with high duty motor that has a record of fifty-five miles an hour without motor vibration.

"In presenting two eights, the Jackson company is simply expressing its sound conviction that the 'Eight' is the ultimate car for buyers of all classes who seeks that ultra smoothness of operation characteristic of the type," states Treasurer Howard A. Matthews. "Our Model '8' at $1,685 is a big seventy horsepower seven-passenger touring car while model '348' is a light five-passenger car of moderate wheel base.

MODEL "34" A WINNER.

"We have not abandoned nor do we intend to desert four cylinder construction. In this field great progress has been made in refinement and development. Our new model '34' with its remarkable high speed motor has a degree of flexibility and balance that up to the present year was considered impossible to secure without adding more cylinders.

"We have always been advocates of powerful motors but these new Jacksons are really creating new standards even for the Jackson Company. There will always be a demand for a high efficiency four and it is to this circle of buyers that our Model '34' makes its appeal."

All three models are proving very popular and it is an open secret that the Jackson volume of production will this year exceed all previous records.

The eight-cylinder models have cylinder dimensions of 2⅞x4½ for the light eight and 3⅛x4½ for the seven-passenger eight. It will be noted that only the large eight has seven-passenger capacity, the other two models being supplied with five-passenger touring bodies.

A conspicuous feature common to all three models is the unusually high finish and the use of extra good leather for the upholstery. The "four" is finished in Brewster green with wheels of the same color while the light eight has dark green body with natural wood wheels. The large eight is finished in dark blue of a very attractive shade.

EMPIRE CARS WERE PROMINENT AT SHOW

Distinctive among the exhibits at the New York automobile show was that of the Empire Automobile Company, because of the fact that brilliant colors prevail in the finish of the cars displayed, the first announcement of new color schemes in the company's cars. This policy marks a decided advance among cars in the Empire class, departing as it does from the conventional blue, black or green.

Along with this announcement comes the first notice of a new four-cylinder type in what is designated as Model 45. This is a larger car than any previous four-cylinder Empire, having a wheelbase of 116 inches. The body is distinctive, being of exceptional roomy, refined, streamline type with double cowl in tonneau. This car is finished in Autumn brown, with Spanish leather upholstery to match. This will be a standard color on this type.

The six-cylinder touring car shown is finished in a light shade of mojave brown, making a striking appearance against the dark background.

ELIMINATION OF WATER PUMP SYSTEMS

One of the noticeable effects of the effort to secure simplicity is in the elimination of many of the water pumps and the corresponding increase of thermo-syphon cooling. Another reason for the thermo-syphon is that the size of the motor is decreasing, and it is much easier to cool a small motor than a large one by the thermo-syphon circulation.

FLORIDA IS NOW BUILDING MANY FINE NEW HIGHWAYS

Spent Over $100,000,000 Last Year on 2,848 Miles of Improved Roads.

James R. Murphy, of Palatka, Fla., who is a good roads enthusiast and one of the big factors in the good roads movement in Florida, is North on business.

"We are certainly building good roads in Florida," said Mr. Murphy, "and we will soon have the State gridironed with them. Within two or three years there will not be a point of interest in the whole State which the automobilist cannot reach on a good, hard, smooth, surfaced road.

"Brick has been the favorite material for those communities that can afford it, but sand asphalt is making rapid headway. The cost is less than half of that of brick, and the sand can be had alongside the roads in any part of the State.

"Last year Florida built 2,848 miles of good roads at a cost of more than $100,000,000. Half of the roads were surfaced with sand clay, 857 miles with marl or crushed stone, and eighty-five miles with brick.

CENTRE GOOD ROAD MOVEMENT.

"Palatka is the centre of the good roads movement, as it is the hub of traffic for the State of Florida and the most direct route from Jacksonville and northern Florida to all points on the east and west coasts.

"The Jacksonville-Tampa Scenic Highway is routed through Greencove Springs to Palatka.

"The Dixie Highway runs via St. Augustine and Hastings, and Palatka has just voted bonds for brick road bringing it through East Palatka into Palatka.

"The connecting link of the east and west loop of the Dixie Highway from Gainesville will go through East Palatka to Hastings.

"It has been officially recommended that the Florida extension of the National Highway from Valdosta, Ga., be extended direct to Palatka. This is called the Suwanee River automobile route to Florida. It is already passable, but is not yet hard surfaced. At a meeting held this month at White Springs, representatives of all the counties through which it passes were gathered 2000 strong and pledged themselves to build hard roads. This is the most direct highway to Florida from all points in the East and the South.

"This gives Florida three lines from the North and one each from the West, East and South.

ANOTHER HARD ROAD PROJECT.

"At a meeting held last week at Rodman, Fla., it was decided to biuld a hard road, probably sand asphalt, from Palatka to Orange Springs, the county line of Putnam County.

"Orange Springs is one of the oldest and best known health resorts for the residents of Florida, but for a long while lacked the railroad facilities which it has now. It is soon to have a modern hotel, a sanitarium, water works, electric lights, and every facility of an up-to-date community. It is right in the centre of the best hunting and fishing territory in Florida, the famous Ocklawaha River Valley, which is a sportsman's paradise.

"Maron County has started a movement to hard surface this road from Orange Springs to Ocala, as it is part of the most direct route from Jacksonville to Tampa.

"Yes, sir, Florida takes the blue ribbon for road building in proportion to population. She has already expended $8,000,000 in good roads, and in the last year has voted to expend $3,000,000 more."

MOTOR TIRE SIZES ARE MADE SMALLER

"Work toward simplifying the number of tire sizes has made very satisfactory progress, as anyone who remembers the jumble of a few years ago will agree," says W. R. Bliss, branch manager of The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company. "At one time some companies listed and provided as many as fifty-one distinct sizes of tires for automobiles. In those days tires cost the consumer much more than they do now—and that was one of the reasons why.

"The S. A. E.'s standard list now contains only nine sizes—with nine oversize profiles to correspond. They are:

Standard	Oversize
30x3	31x3½
30x3½	31x4
32x3½	33x4
32x4	33x4½
34x4	35x4½
34x4½	35x5
36x4½	37x5
36x5	37x5½
38x5½	39x6

The windshield is a far better appearing job today than it was two years or even a year ago. There is a marked tendency to rake it backward slightly [illegible] which tends to cut down the wind resistance of the car and at the same time adds a rakish appearance [illegible].

It is [illegible] part of the car now and is not stuck on as an afterthought. [illegible] it conforms to the lines of the car and really enhances the beauty of the entire design instead of being merely a mass of glass work.

BETTER TOPS

Tops, of course, are better than ever before. The one-person design has passed through the joke stage unscathed, and now [illegible] really bear out its name.

There was a time when it was necessary for the owner to call his friends and neighbors to assist in putting up the one person top, but it can really be done now by one person without leaving the seat, and the side curtains likewise can be placed in position by simply unrolling them from the [illegible]

Model 83 B

With unerring judgment of value—

With a rush that swallowed up a record production in jig time—

The public took more than 50,000 of the $750 Overlands in six months.

In six months we've absorbed all the overhead; absorbed all the development expense; realized on all the experimental cost that is usually spread over a year.

We covered our material requirements at before-the-war prices—saved three and a half million dollars on aluminum and another million on steel.

We have increased our production capacity of 300 cars per day last June to 1000 cars per day.

So again we have broken all records.

Again we have planned and bought material for a bigger production program.

And again we are setting a new and supreme standard of value—

You can now buy the big, roomy, comfortable, thirty-five horsepower Overland for $695.

Here is the value which has clearly dominated the automobile market for the last six months—now made even more clearly dominant.

Here is the car with a performance record never even approached by any car of its size ever built—fifty thousand in every day service.

And though the price is reduced the car is improved.

It has an up-to-the-minute power plant, en bloc type, developing full thirty-five horsepower. It has abundant power and speed and an exceptionally quick get-away.

The value is pre-eminent—unapproached.

We guarantee that the price for this model will never be lower.

But this price reduction is made in the face of a rising material market—we cannot guarantee that it will not be higher.

See the Overland dealer now—anticipate your requirement if need be—but make sure of your delivery now.

No Radical Changes in Mechanical Principles of Last Year's Car.

New York, Jan. [illegible] — [illegible] Cadillac booth at the [illegible] show is shown [illegible] portions cut away exposing [illegible] construction and operation [illegible] feature which the Cadillac Company was first to [illegible] in the early days of the [illegible] has been a feature [illegible] ever since that time.

This [illegible] one which attracted so much attention at the [illegible] Exposition, where the Cadillac was the only motor car exhibited with a V type engine.

The body types exhibited include the seven-passenger touring car, the roadster, the coupe, the brougham and the berlin.

Lack of space makes it impossible to exhibit the entire line which, in addition to the above, consists of a five-passenger salon, a victoria and a limousine.

A comparison of the present chassis with that shown a year ago reveals no radical changes in mechanical principles.

This is quite in contrast with the usual. Almost invariably the automobile manufacturer discovers after placing a new type of car in the hands of the users that a number of changes and betterments are needed. The opposite, however, proved true of the Cadillac Eight.

PRAISES ROADS IN UNITED STATES

R. E. Olds of Reo Company Says Americans Under-Estimate Excellence.

"We Americans are prone to overestimate and [illegible]," says R. E. Olds, president of the Reo Motor Car Company. "At least [illegible] made by our European cousins.

"I sometimes wonder if [illegible]. I wonder if we do not too often underestimate our possessions and our achievements. We are accustomed to saying that we have the worst roads in the world and to hold up as an example of perfect roads the centuries-old highways of Europe.

"We are careful to select which European countries we will use. In doing so we ignore Belgium, Holland, Scandinavian countries, Russia, the Balkans and Turkey. That reduces it to the British Isles, France, Germany and Italy. Then we reduce it that it covers only the main travelled roads.

"I have found in talking with Americans who have toured abroad that most of them will give as examples of model highways a few main travelled roads. But ask them about the general roads of any country and they will either tell you they do not know, or if perchance one has happened to lose his way and gotten onto one of the byways, he will admit that they are about as bad as he has ever seen in Michigan or Nebraska."

POCKETBOOK DECIDES WHAT CAR TO PURCHASE

Buying an Auto Is Generally a Compromise Between a Man's Purse and His Ideal, and the Former, for Many Practical Reasons, Nearly Always Properly Decides the Course to Take.

[illegible] promise [illegible] and his [illegible] is [illegible] for [illegible] man makes [illegible] well in buying [illegible] what to the [illegible] a purchase [illegible] will make [illegible] more cost[illegible]

There is [illegible] in selecting a [illegible] entirely eliminate the chances of securing a vehicle which will either cost too much in the first place or cost too much to run [illegible] to be general [illegible] purposes to which it is to be put.

The proper car for a man with an income of $2,[illegible] per [illegible] and [illegible] children is not the same as that [for] the single youth with a $[illegible] allowance, with no one to support but a bulldog.

PREPAREDNESS IN BUYING

Before [illegible] into the [illegible] of the persuasive salesman your [illegible] In the [illegible] sit down with a [illegible] and consider your [illegible] the following:

1. How [illegible] reasonably afford to spend for a car?
2. How [illegible] afford to spend for the maintenance [illegible]

These are the first [illegible] the prospective [illegible] vital spot [illegible] The reason [illegible] should be [illegible] questions [illegible]

It would at first seem [illegible] the average person who has made [illegible] casual inquiry [illegible] to prices [illegible] answer [illegible] fact of the [illegible] after the [illegible] these questions [illegible] mediately. The automobile industry [illegible] on such a [illegible] at the present time [illegible] a range [illegible] such a [illegible] of cars that a man may spend anywhere from $400 [illegible] $[illegible],000 [illegible] have a wide range [illegible]

The intending purchaser will therefore nearly always set down a figure which will suffice to put him in a certain price zone of cars. He may say, for example, anywhere from $[illegible] to $1,000. This will open up a wide field from which to choose.

The second figure, on upkeep, will depend whether or not the intending buyer is a city dweller or a country dweller, whether he intends to keep a chauffeur or drive himself and so [illegible]. At any rate the second figure should be about somewhat higher than what [is] figured for [illegible] cost, to take care of the incidentals which may come up.

SHOULD CONSIDER NEEDS.

Having carefully determined the purchase price which is correct and then resolutely made up his mind to stick firmly [illegible] his decision, the car buyer should carefully consider the features that he wants in a car. These features [illegible] selected from among the following: speed, [illegible] nature of country to be driven in, amount of usage expected per [illegible], number of passengers to be carried on the average trip, seasons of the year car is to be used, kind of trips to be taken and who is to drive.

If a car is desired for medium speeds, as will be the case in the vast majority of instances, it does not mean that this car will not at times be able to run at high speeds. For medium speeds, however, where [illegible] miles an hour will be the average running rate in the open country, any of the stock touring models will fill the bill. For high speed where the fast work will be sustained the purchaser will probably need a higher gear ratio, and instead of a car geared around 4 or 4½ to 1 a car with a ratio of 3 to 1 will be selected.

By the [illegible] the load-carrying [illegible] wanted [illegible] passenger body will be desirable. If, on the other hand, it is known [illegible] load will always be a certain [illegible] it is far more economical to purchase a car with a body [illegible] capacity, because it is cheaper to [illegible] as it carries no dead weight. [illegible] passenger roadster is a good ex[illegible] economy [illegible]

[illegible] have plenty of reserve power [illegible] should compare the piston [illegible] ments of the [illegible] which he desires [illegible] car is for [illegible] power, big valve [illegible] gear [illegible] should be [illegible]

Important Points in Output of Motor Vehicles in Year 1915

That the power of absorption of automobiles is far from [illegible] in this country is shown by the greatly increased [illegible] of cars during the past year. As to how the out[put] [illegible] forward, ever in longer steps, the production of [illegible] vehicles for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, was [illegible] while for the calendar year ended December 1, it is [estim]ated to be 900,000. PERCY D. HAUGHTON, HARVARD FOOTBALL COACH, BUYS BRAVES

James E. Gaffney and Robert H. Davis Likely to Buy Stock in Giants, the Former to Become President

BOSTON BRAVES ARE IN LOCAL HANDS AGAIN

Harvard Coach Will Be Elected President of Club at Meeting Next Week.

By HERMAN NICKERSON

ONCE more in its long and glorious history the Boston National League baseball club is in the hands of Boston owners. Th[illegible] which [illegible] under cont[illegible] serve [illegible] James E. Gaffney and Robert H. Davis, the principal stockholders, [illegible] Arthur D. Wise [illegible] Roe and H[illegible] Percy D. Haughton, the famous Harvard [illegible] coach.

While [illegible]

GAFFNEY FOR THE GIANTS.

Interest in the new owners and their plans for the conduct of the Braves, of course, is intense, yet the future in baseball of Messrs. Gaffney and Davis shares an equal part.

Indications point almost directly to these gentlemen being large share owners in the New York Giants. Mr. Gaffney has always been strongly in favor of local ownership and [illegible] of the Giants to Harry Sinclair opens the door for these gentlemen to enter [illegible]

Mr. Gaffney's original investment in the Boston Nationals was something less than $190,000. During the period he has held the club he has cleared up over [illegible], which would indicate that business in baseball is profitable.

When President Hempstead sells the [illegible] that M[illegible]ffney and Davis will be [illegible] part owners. President [illegible] has been a valuable man for [illegible] baseball and will [illegible] president of the Giants [illegible] Messrs. Davis and Sin[illegible] of the board of directors of the club.

MADE BIG PROFIT.

The deal for the Boston club has been [illegible] the deal for the Giants. The sale of the franchise to Boston people clears the way for Messrs. Gaffney and Davis to take [illegible] the Giants.

The price paid for the Braves was not announced, but it is regarded as being close to [illegible].

The Commonwealth Realty Trust, which put the deal through for [illegible] period of [illegible]

The new organization of the Boston National League Baseball Company will have Mr. Percy D. Haughton as president, Mr. Arthur D. Wise as treasurer, [illegible] business manager. The office of vice president and the president of the board of directors will be decided upon next week when the postponed annual meeting [illegible] will be held. Messrs. Gaffney and Davis expect to [illegible] Boston on Tuesday next, so the date of the annual meeting will be very soon after that.

STALLINGS REMAINS.

Both Mr. Haughton and Mr. Wise were strong in their appreciation of Manager George T. Stallings, whose contract with the club has two years to run. "It is very essential that a ball club have a good manager, and when we found the best in the country, we insisted that he remain," said Mr. Wise.

Telegrams were sent to "Boss" George by both Mr. Haughton and Mr. Gaffney. The text of these appears elsewhere on this page, as also will be found the statements by the retiring and incoming presidents.

So far as the club's membership is concerned, the announcement was made that all the players had been signed for 1916 with the exception of Red Smith, the third baseman, and Joe Connolly, the left fielder.

While the sale of the club came as a big surprise to followers of baseball in Boston and New England, it is not such an upheaval as many would imagine. New York ownership appeals to President Gaffney and Director Davis. Mr. Houghton has always had a leaning toward baseball as a business and Mr. Wise has been active in baseball business, through having financed the holding company operating Fenway Park. Al[illegible] Taylor brought [illegible] at that time and also figured in having Millett Roe and Hagan handle the bond issue of Braves Field.

It has been known for several seasons that Boston capital represented by this firm has been in the market for a ball club. Now that is an accomplished fact.

HAUGHTON TO BE VERY ACTIVE.

The fact that the Boston National League Baseball Company had not held its annual meeting was not considered by those who followed baseball as important. Neither was the fact that Percy D. Haughton's delay in announcing whether he were to respond to the demands of the undergraduates and alumni of Harvard to again direct the football destinies of that university considered unusual.

Both these events watched for by the public are now explained. For with the new duties that will de[illegible] and his time fully occupied it w[illegible] be practically impossible for him even think of coaching football [illegible] Harvard.

BOSTON OWNER AGAIN.

For the first time in a [illegible] years, or dating back to the day w[illegible] the "Triumvirate" Billings, Soden, Conant and the Boston N[illegible] George B. Dovey, of Lou[illegible] Boston owners. Following Dovey's death his brother [illegible] assumed the presidency and carried [illegible] F. Harris of Pittsburgh and W. Hepburn Russell of New York. The conduct of the club was left [illegible] the hands of Mr. Russell. Mr. H[illegible] ness in Pittsburgh and other points in the Middle West. For a short [illegible] Page, a [illegible] vice-president [illegible] necessitated th[illegible] ings and James [illegible] York and John M. Ward [illegible] York, acquired the club [illegible] was elected [illegible] vice president [illegible] was in 1912 [illegible] the club was acquired by Mr. [illegible]ney buying [illegible] up to today Mr. Gaffney has [illegible] owner of the [illegible]

GAFFNEY'S SUCCESS.

The first thing Mr. Ga[illegible] securing the [illegible] George T. Stallings as [illegible] long term. Mr. [illegible] the Boston club [illegible] every way [illegible] whom he felt he owed [illegible] meant producing a w[illegible] He had secured [illegible] 1914 w[illegible] and the world's [illegible]

Last season, [illegible] unavoidable accidents [illegible] kept them from the game, the Braves would undoubtedly [illegible]

[illegible] Mr. Gaffney has been associated with [illegible] ball game in Boston he [illegible] as the "forlorn hope" [illegible] game in the United States.

LEAVES HOST OF FRIENDS.

Mr. Gaffney came to Boston practically unknown and in the few years that he has figured as owner of the Braves he has always proven himself to be honest in his statements [illegible] eager at all times to give the people who supported his club the very best that money and brains could furnish.

He leaves Boston with a host of friends wishing him the best of success in all his ventures.

Boston is not alone the loser in the departure from baseball of Mr. Gaffney, for it was his guiding hand in the [illegible] organized baseball found itself recently that brought it into the open with credit to itself and with honor to the game.

Robert H. Davis, [illegible] in the ownership of the club, is a leading real estate operator in New York city. He was always in accord with Mr. Gaffney's policy in conducting the club and proved of valuable assistance during the time of the building of the new park. Mr. Davis' modest ways in keeping in the background were only another evidence of his strength in business.

BOTH PRACTICAL BASEBALL MEN.

Mr. Wise has always taken an active interest in baseball. During his high school years in Brookline he was a capable player. His position in the banking world is one of prominence and his business ability one of worth. He is a native of Boston, having a home in Hingham, Mass.

Mr. Haughton practically answers the Harvard football coaching question in his statement in which he says he is to devote his time to the club. The announcement that he will not coach the Crimson squad next Fall will be a disappointment to the alumni and undergraduates alike.

In handling men he has always been fair and painstaking. In his new duties as president of the Braves he brings an aggressive personality to match that of Manager Stallings and Captain J. J. Evers. This trio should have a corner on all the "pep" in the league.

Mr. Haughton and Mr. Stallings have met upon many occasions and there is much in common between them. They both know the game of baseball [illegible] views. When the coaching proposition at Harvard was in a tangle, Mr. Haughton took hold and brought the Crimson team through with credit. At college the new president played second base and pitched.

Haughton Will Devote Entire Time to Club

By P. D. HAUGHTON.

In acquiring an interest in the Boston National League club, which so sensationally won the world's championship two years ago, and in becoming the club's president following the sale of the club by President Gaffney, I want to make it clear to the tens of thousands of baseball fans in this city and vicinity that in devoting my time to the club and its interests in the future I shall strive to give the patrons of the game exactly as high, and if possible a higher standard of baseball at Braves Field than they have been accustomed to witness in the past. I have always been keenly interested in professional baseball myself, and welcome the opportunity offered of becoming financially and actively identified with the older of the major leagues.

It will be the policy of the new owners, as it was of President Gaffney, to strengthen the Braves wherever and whenever possible, to the end that the Braves may again participate in the World's Series of 1916. It is entirely superfluous for me to add that Mr. George T. Stallings, whom I have long known and highly regarded as a man and a manager, will continue to be absolutely in charge of the playing end. Boston is everywhere recognized as the best and fairest baseball city in the country. The new owners fully recognize this and propose that the supporters of the game shall be supplied with the highest brand of baseball it is possible to give them.

RED SOX TRAINING PLANS ANNOUNCED

Manager Bill Carrigan [illegible] The first squad of the World's champions will report at Hot Springs, Ark., on March 12, the men being pitchers and catchers. The other players will assemble on March 19. The start from Hot Springs for Memphis, Tenn., will be made so as to play there on April 1, 2 and 3. The jump is then to Brooklyn for April 6, 7 and 8. A game may be arranged between Memphis and Brooklyn.

The American League will probably open April 1[illegible]. Manager Carrigan will find some place to take his team for training after the Brooklyn series. The Red Sox expect to open at home.

SALARY LIMIT IN A. A.

Chicago, Jan. 8.—A salary limit on American Association clubs may be adopted by that circuit for the purpose of keeping [illegible] League stars who jumped their contracts, according to association officials.

Price Caused Pres. Gaffney to Sell

By JAS. E. GAFFNEY.

James E. Gaffney, in announcing the sale of the Boston National League club, said that he very deeply regretted leaving Boston, and that he should look back in the years to come upon those during which he was owner of the Braves as among the pleasantest of his life.

"I have formed many, many pleasant friendships since coming to this city," he said, "friendships that I shall always retain and cherish. But I am not completely disposing of my Boston interests, however, for, while I have sold the ball club, I am still interested in the ownership of Braves Field.

"The Braves have not been in the market, and I had no intention of selling a club with which I fully expected to win the National League pennant again in 1916 until a few days ago, when the initial overtures were first made. But when I discovered that I could secure a price upon the stock that would net me a substantial profit, I could not, as a business man, turn down the proposition. Although I no longer have a financial interest in the Braves they will always be the ball club that will be nearest my heart—the team I shall root for in the future as I have in the past."

GARRY SURPRISED BY NEWS OF SALE

Cincinnati, O., Jan. 8.—Chairman August Herrmann of the National Baseball Commission expressed himself as surprised when [illegible] from Boston stated that the Braves had been sold.

"I don't understand it," he said, "for only this morning I received an inquiry from Mr. Gaffney [illegible]"

However, it was generally understood that the club has been in way for sale a year or more. Probably [illegible] proposed and closed suddenly.

"It is my opinion that the club was sold because Mr. Gaffney wants to return to New York, which [illegible] and where his business interests centre."

From another source considered particularly well informed in baseball matters it was declared that Gaffney and Harry Sinclair are trying together to buy the New York Giants.

Common rumor during the baseball peace negotiations here persistently linked Sinclair's name with Gaffney's in an alleged deal to buy the Giants, but the stories always were denied by the officials of the Giants.

According [illegible] which, however, [illegible] permit identification, New Yorkers will very soon see a fulfillment of the rumors regarding the Giants club sale.

Baseball magnates here generally were staggered to learn that Jim Gaffney has sold out his interest in the Braves on account of his evident enthusiasm as evidenced by his construction of the Allston district park.

Clark Griffith, formerly the Reds' manager, was really responsible for introducing Mr. Gaffney into [illegible] Griffith made a fan out of Gaffney and ere long the big contractor began to seek entrance to the circle of magnates.

When the chance to buy the Braves was offered, Mr. Gaffney seized it and promptly began plans for the huge field in Allston. He is a royal spender, a jovial good fellow, and became a great favorite, it is said here, among the magnates during his brief connection with the game of today.

Rovers Move Up by Win Over Electrics

Fall River, Jan. 8.—In the second round of the American Cup Tie series played here this afternoon, the Fall Rivers defeated the General Electrics [illegible] one of the best [illegible] this season.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE WINS BY 4 TO 3 FROM HARVARD

Game Is Very Fast from Start to Finish—Crimson Appeared Stale.

By JOHN W. MORAN, JR.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE [illegible] Ont., repeated against [illegible] Curtis counted twice for Harvard and her other score came just before the end of the first half, when Baldwin took a pretty pass from Curtis and [illegible]

The game [illegible] Though [illegible] be classed as a [illegible] or coach, he would venture the [illegible] that Coach W[illegible] his Harvard [illegible] too much work.

UNABLE TO STAND PACE.

Last night they appeared [illegible] out of shape, and almost unable to stand the stiff pace set by the Canadians. Aside from Captain [illegible] Morgan it can truthfully be said that each and every one of the Crimson players was winded long ere the game ended.

Harvard was forced to go into the game without the services of her clever rover, George Percy. Percy, though few know it, is at present suffering from an attack of la grippe, and will be out of the Harvard hockey lineup for possibly a few more days. Lawrence Curtis replaced him and played fine hockey during the game.

Queens herself was handicapped to a certain extent, inasmuch as Toland, the star right wing, was forced to play with a fractured rib. During the latter part of the first half Toland was forced to retire after having been forced down through an accidental stick thrust which landed quite close to his injured member.

CURTIS SHOOTS GOAL.

Soon after the first face-off Box, the star coverpoint for Queens, got the puck and skated prettily down [illegible] Harvard lineup. Like the great Art Ross he went between men, pausing just long enough to shoot the [illegible] and then jump be[illegible] He failed at a goal, however, [illegible] the Harvard de[illegible] and Jack Wylde collected his first stop.

A few seconds later Wallace got [illegible] and picked a [illegible] minutes and twenty [illegible] They had hardly faced off when Johnny Morgan got the puck [illegible] went down through the Canadian [illegible] to a point of vantage. He shot prettily to Curtis, who scored in three minutes and ten seconds.

Just after the next face-off Wallace [illegible] Box did some pretty passing, and just as the latter shot the puck into the net the whistle blew for an offside, which took a good goal away from the Queens. [illegible] were a number of pretty plays by both [illegible]

MORGAN LIVENS IT UP.

Just before the thirteenth minute Rappell and Wallace worked down through the Harvard line and another score resulted. Then came another face-off, and within the minute the puck was down in Harvard territory. A foul followed and on the next face-off Wallace, who was doing the work [illegible], kicked the puck into the Harvard net from about twenty feet away, at an angle.

The last count gave Queens a three-to-one lead and just after it Winsor sent "Wop" Morgan in for Rice, and [illegible] Spencer with Robertson. It was at that point that Toland was struck during a scrimmage and forced to retire in favor of McQuaig.

Just after eighteen minutes, "Wop" Morgan and Curtis got down the ice and shot Harvard's second goal. Within another minute the Crimson worked [illegible] Queens' net, but Parker knocked it down with his gloved hand. A scrimmage followed, at the net, and Harvard shot the tying goal with only seventeen seconds left to play.

FLASHES OF BRILLIANCY.

The half had been marked by splendid skating and stick handling by the visitors. At times there were flashes of brilliancy on the part of the Harvard players, [illegible] these [illegible] If any criticism might be offered of the work of the Canadians it would be on the score of their failing to pass the puck with any degree of liberality. It would seem that the leading fault of all Canadian teams has been their lack of desire to pass the puck.

When the second half started Toland and Spencer returned to the game for the Canadians and right away the puck went down into Harvard territory. Toland shot for the net and the rubber landed in Wylde's skates where it stuck for some few seconds. Harvard staved off a score several times during the scrimmage which followed its extrication and the face-off.

The Canadians were still forcing the game and skating fast all the while. Winsor sent Fisher and Bliss in to replace Baldwin and Thacher. Goddard, who showed to fine advantage for the Canadians, got loose just after that and had there been anyone with him a score would have resulted.

THE DECIDING GOAL.

There was a scrimmage at the net a few minutes later, and during the course of it W[illegible] went down, but yet managed to [illegible] stop. Just after that Rappell worked his way down and shot the deciding goal of the game in 11 minutes 11 seconds of the second half.

Just after the face-off, Toland and F[illegible] [illegible] to one another hard and [illegible] was forced to retire with [illegible] Baker replaced him and at the same time Lombard replaced Bliss. There followed several [illegible] during one of them [illegible] of a glaring case of [illegible] behind. For that offense Referee Fred Rocque sent him off the ice for two minutes. [illegible] with Box still off the ice and with the puck constantly in Queens' territory, Parker managed to get [illegible] pretty stops during the [illegible] which resulted.

St. Nick Beaten by Canadian Champions

New York, Jan. 8.—The Montreal A. A. A. seven, champions of Canada, administered a neat licking to the St. Nicholas team, hockey champions of the Amateur League at St. Nicholas Rink, last night. The visitors took the local lads into camp by [illegible] points to 1.

"Hobey" Baker, who played rover for the humbled aggregation and who generally gains most all of the points for his side, did not shine as he usually does. The lads from across the border put up a brand that the Americans were unable to equal.

By some mighty fast team work in the early stages of the first period Reed drove the puck into the net for the first point for the Canadians. Very soon after Schart drove in another, piling up the lead for his team mates.

St. Nicholas team came back in the second period with vengeance in their eyes and worked like demons. By a [illegible] Cox scored the first point and the only one for the humbled team. The final ace tallied by the Canadians was recorded by Spriggins. The lineup:

COWLER MAY PROVE STUMBLING BLOCK FOR BAT LEVINSKY

"Gentleman Jim" Corbett's Protege a Clever Ringman, Well Informed as to Inside Ring Matters; Morgan's Battler Hopes to Start Year with Clean-Cut Victory.

BATTLING LEVINSKY, the clever New York light heavyweight, led all other boxers in actual contests last year. The battler engaged in twenty-eight bouts, but he claims that record will be smashed to smithereens this year. He is out to make a mark that will not be equalled for some time. Levinsky, if all things go well, plans to box at least once a week during 1916.

His bout at the Armory A. A. Tuesday night will make his initial appearance of the new year. Levinsky's manager, in view of this, declares it will be necessary for Levinsky to appear in the ring either Friday or Saturday night of next week in order to establish the record he proposes.

Tom Cowler, his opponent, will have something to say about that, however. Cowler is a big fellow, well-informed as to inside ring matters, and sure to prove a stumbling block for Levinsky or any other man who undertakes such a prodigious task.

Be that as it may, the bout between Levinsky and Cowler should, so far as heavyweight contests go, be a classic, inasmuch as both are rated as the cleverest men in the game.

LEVINSKY CLEVER.

The knowledge of boxing gleaned by Levinsky through his association with such men as Jack Britton and Matt Wells, who are generally recognized as the cleverest boys in the game, and that imparted to Cowler by Jim Corbett, makes this match stand out conspicuously as one of the best between big men ever planned for a Boston club.

Levinsky proved to be a punishing fighter when he faced Sandy Ferguson. True, he was handicapped, but despite this he showed class and skill that were salient features of the altercation. Inside he was at home, and at long range boxing he demonstrated that he was a past master at the game.

Cowler has had the benefit of Jim Corbett's tutoring. "Gentleman Jim" was recognized as the greatest strategist the ring ever saw. His tactics were of such a classy order that the cleverest boxers he faced were bewildered by his system.

CORBETT WISE HANDLER.

Corbett was as fast on his feet as a featherweight. Charlie Mitchell, the wonderful English boxer, who was one of the most elusive men of his time, received a boxing lesson from the champion when they met. Mitchell couldn't lay a glove on him.

This is the man who has taken Cowler in hand and taught him all he knows. He has brought him from the bottom to within hailing distance of the top, and Corbett says he is not going to halt where they are now. It is the title or retirement as a manager for Corbett. Jim can add more to his bank account as a monologist than as a manager of a second or third rate boxer.

For that particular reason Cowler will have to show all he knows with Levinsky. He will not be in a town where the no-decision rule is the order. A verdict will be given and that verdict will send one man back and the other up, so it behooves Corbett to have Cowler at his best.

WHITE TO REFEREE.

Interest in the mill is at a point not often noticed before match, and old-timers in particular are showing that they are deeply concerned in the bout. It probably means a reunion of the old-timers now that Jim Corbett is due.

In the semi-final some hard punching will be seen. Young Jasper of the North End and Johnny Wilson of New York have been paired for battle. Jasper has been fighting like a champion and recently whipped Joe White of South Boston and Soldier Shaw of Brooklyn.

Charley White of New York will referee the main bout.

English Soccer Upsets Are Plentiful

New York, Jan. 8.—The soccer games decided today in the English and Scottish Leagues again resulted in many surprises. The Burnley-Manchester United game at Turf Moor, which was the star attraction in the northern section drew a large crowd, who saw a big scoring game result in a win for the home team by 7 to 4.

Everton and Manchester City both won their games, which makes the race for first position in the table very exciting. Liverpool scored a surprising win over Stockport County by 3 to 1. This loss puts a bad damper on the prospects of the losers.

In the Midland [illegible] the leaders, Notts Forest, had a difficult proposition in tackling Leeds City away from home and, despite a big effort, lost their third game in the competition this season by the only goal scored.

Leicester Fosse, Sheffield United and Barnsley are running neck-and-neck for second place, but all losing today leaves the positions at the top of the table unchanged.

PENSIONERS KEEP IT UP

The chief London game was played at Stamford Bridge between Chelsea and Queens Park Rangers before a large gathering of supporters of both clubs. The Pensioners kept up their winning streak by disposing of the Rangers by the large margin of 5 to 1, increasing their lead at the top of the table to seven points over Milwall, which could only share the points with Brentford away from home.

A full program of Scottish League games was decided, but Hearts being the only leading team to lose, a slight change is made at the top of the table, Morton getting into second place and Hearts dropping to fourth.

The Rangers, who lost two valuable points to Partick Thistles on Monday, were in fine form today by beating Motherwell all ends up by 4 to 1. Celtic put up a great show by winning their away game with the difficult Dumbarton side by 2 to 1, while the famous amateur club, Queens Park, aroused quite a sensation by beating St. Mirren away from home and made a useful jump in the table.

START NEW YEAR WELL.

They have commenced the New Year splendidly, earning five out of a possible six points. Complete results.

SPANISH WRESTLER IN TUOHEY'S SHOW

Andre Balsa, the Spanish heavyweight wrestler, will make his first appearance in Boston on Thursday night as the opponent of Yousouf Hussane, the remarkable Bulgarian wrestler, when they meet to a finish as the principal number of George Tuohey's carnival at the Hippodrome.

Balsa, in addition to being a great wrestler under any style, is best known in Europe as the champion of the world in wrestling untamed bulls, a sport that is common in Europe and in Latin countries, but is practically unknown here.

Balsa is remarkably agile for a big man, very powerful and one of the most daring and courageous men in the game. As he is very aggressive the battle promises to be red hot from start to finish.

Promoter Tuohey has his lines out for several other grapplers who will clash in the preliminaries.

PLAN SOCCER FOR BOSTON SCHOOLS

A meeting of the State League will be held this evening at the Crawford House to make arrangements for the introduction of soccer among the schools of Greater Boston.

Several invitations were sent out to principals and instructors of the schools early last week and a big attendance is expected.

Delegates from the various clubs now organized under the National body have also been called to attend. A cup has already been donated by an anonymous giver.

$4,000 FOR WELSH FOR A 'BUSH' FIGHT

Philadelphia, Jan. 8.—Lightweight Champion Freddie Welsh and Eddie McAndrews are practically matched to meet in a fifteen round bout at Norristown, Pa., February 1. Promoter O'Brien has offered a $4,000 guarantee to Welsh with the privilege of 50 per cent. of the gross receipts. O'Brien stipulates that a Philadelphian be selected as referee and Welsh is willing to agree to this request.

Gilmore Outpointed.

Sydney, N. S. W., Jan. 8.—Tom Uren, the Australian welterweight, today defeated Freddie Gilmore, the Chicago fighter, at Baker's Stadium. The fight went the full twenty rounds. Uren had all the better of the argument.

TITLE RUN GOES TO GREEK

Gianakopolus Wins Senior Cross-Country Championship—Kolehmainen Second.

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—Nick Gianakopolus, the sturdy Greek, carried the silks of the Millrose Athletic Association to victory in the annual senior national cross-country championship, which was held over the Van Cortlandt Park course yesterday. He raced over the distance, which was slightly over six miles, in 32 minutes 46 3-5 seconds.

Hannes Kolehmainen, of the Irish American A. C. followed over the line in the wake of the victor. Russell Springsteen of the Yonkers Y. M. C. A., the only individual contestant, was the third to finish.

There were only two teams entered for the team honors. The Irish American A. C. won only after a hard battle from the Millrose A. A. by a difference of five points. The Winged fist aggregation garnered twenty-five points to their rival's thirty.

ONLY FIFTEEN STARTED.

Fifteen runners, heavily clad in Winter garments, toed the mark. It was the smallest field that ever participated in this titular event. Of this flock that started save two had the necessary stamina and grit to journey the route. The course was cleared of snow, but it was stiff and hard from the cold air, which made it rather unpleasant for stepping. The water jump, which was part of the course in previous races, was eliminated. It was frozen into a solid piece of ice.

From the competition standpoint, it was one of the hardest fought hill and dale chases ever contested in these sections. At no time during the race except in the final 500 yards did the pacemaker hold more than a three or four yard lead.

At the crack of the starting gun the harriers tore away from the starting point almost as a unit and ran nearly abreast for almost 300 yards before they started to fall into Indian file. Springsteen, who is generally the pacemaker at the commencing of all distance races, took the initiative again in blazing the trail.

SETS MERRY CLIP.

He set up a merry clip, with Gianakopolus and Kolehmainen following him in second and third positions, respectively. So they ran, hardly a yard separating them at the end of the first lap. Pat Flynn, of the Irish American A. C., and Villar Kyronen of the Millrose A. A., were in fourth and fifth places, respectively, well up on the leaders at this time of the race.

Springsteen's time for the first lap, which was half of the journey was sixteen minutes, 20 4-5 seconds.

Just after they had crossed the Polo Grounds and about to ascend the hill to get to the golf links, Gianakopolus bounded to the fore. He remained in front for about a mile, and Springsteen on a mild spurt once more recaptured the lead.

About five hundred yards from the end, Gianakopolus put on more speed and advanced to the front. As he did Kolehmainen also increased his stride and grabbed second position. Gianakopolus did not let up his fast gait and plugged on stubbornly.

FINN STARTS TOO LATE.

After the Greek had gained about a hundred yards on him, Kolehmainen saw at once that Gianakopolus was showing no signs of blowing up, unleashed his reserved speed and tried desperately to overtake him, but in vain. The Greek snapped the tape a winner by about thirty yards. The order of finish follows.

1—Nick Gianakopolus, Millrose A. A.	32 46 3-5
2—Hannes Kolehmainen, Irish Am. A. C.	32 54
3—Russell Springsteen, Yonkers Y. M. C. A.	33 [illegible]

HOW shall we play the national amateur championship—match or medal play? This question is uppermost in the minds of the golfing officials who will meet next week at Chicago. The proposition to again change the style before last year's plan has been thoroughly tried out seems a bit out of reason, and it looks as if anything new will have to express the unanimous opinion of the entire delegation before it is adopted.

There have been many suggestions and all of them have merit, but no one idea has met with popular favor. Jerome D. Travers favors [illegible]. John G. Anderson has a plan which is a combination of both match and medal play. Walter J. Travis, who is always worth listening to when he talks golf, says the tournament is too long. There is sure to be a change whether it comes this year or not.

WHEN the change in the championship is made the gallery deserves some consideration. The amateur title tournament always will be the big event of the year in golf. They want the dish served up to them in the most attractive manner, no matter whether it is match or medal play, as long as it provides plenty of excitement.

The gallery wants close matches. This is bound to come in match play, because it is a survival of the fittest. You are not assured of sensational finish in a medal round. There are, of course, exceptions, and the finish at Baltusrol last Summer, when Jerry Travers won was one of them. The victory of Francis Ouimet at Brookline two years ago, when he defeated Vardon and Ray in a sensational three-cornered play-off, was another. But finishes like this are few and far between.

TRAVERS' finish at Baltusrol last June is still fresh in the minds of those who were fortunate enough to see it. Few thought that Jerry—who has a reputation for being strictly a match player—could hold his own against a high-class field of pros at medal play.

Evans and Ouimet had been picked as having a good chance to land the prize. Travers wasn't even considered a possibility, and it was not until the last day that Jerry—then several strokes ahead of Evans and Ouimet and ranking right up with the leading pros—was considered at all.

Beginning the last round in the afternoon, the interest grew apace. Travers was paired with Mike Brady, and both were then tied. The gallery of course followed this pair, but they were not forgetting Louis Tellier, Jim Barnes, Robert McDonald or Tom McNamara, all of whom had a good chance.

Travers, to win had to defeat Brady, as between the two it had practically come to a match round. After the Boston pro had finally been shaken off the victory was by no means won, as word was passed along the line that Tom McNamara had turned in a total of 298 for the four rounds, and the Upper Montclair golfer would have to travel the remaining holes in par figures to beat him. Par figures on the difficult Baltusrol course is no easy matter.

THERE isn't a better finishing hole in the country than the eighteenth at Baltusrol. The wide undulating green lays right in the lap of the clubhouse grounds. From the edge of the green there is a rise in the ground toward the clubhouse veranda. The sloping terrace furnished an ideal spot for the gallery, and every available foot of ground was occupied, as also the large veranda of the clubhouse.

Travers had to make a par four to win, and without taking any undue risks he used his iron from the tee, leaving himself only a mashie-niblic pitch to the green. The gallery followed him every step of the way, and closed in behind him as he stood before the home hole. There were fully five thousand persons in this crowd, banked as if seated in an amphitheatre.

Setting himself, Travers pitched [illegible] to the green and the ball ran up to within eight feet of the cup. It was a down hill putt, but Jerry took no chances and played only for a safe four. When the last putt of six inches sank into the cup the crowd rushed on the green, and Travers was carried off on the shoulders of admiring friends.

Carter-Manson in Pinehurst Finals

Pinehurst, N. C., Jan. 8.—Three weeks of sunshine was broken yesterday by a heavy rain that postponed the semi-finals of the mid-Winter golf tournament until this morning.

As was expected, Phil Carter, the junior Metropolitan champion, who has been surpassing all records on the Pinehurst links, won his match with S. Y. Ramage, Wanango, easily, 6 up and 3 to play.

In the finals he will meet E. T. Manson of Framingham, who defeated W. A. Patterson, Siwanoy, today, 4 and 3. The closest match of the morning was a 19-hole struggle between W. H. White, Norfolk, and E. C. Jones of Toronto, White winning.

The tournament was attended by the [illegible] League of advertising interests, the members of which reached Pinehurst en masse this morning.

GOLF MADE MORE PROGRESS THAN ANY SPORT IN '15

"Chick" Evans Says Past Year Was a Most Successful One on the Links — Can't Pick Best Player — British Golfers Have Suffered Heavily.

By CHARLES ("CHICK") EVANS.

GOLF has made greater progress in 1915 than any other sport, and this fact is all the more surprising because within my knowledge weather conditions rarely have been so bad.

Courses were slow throughout the year, and in consequence the necessity of getting the ball into the air was emphasized, thus unconsciously improving our games.

The new golfers and the old ones played happily together. If it were possible to count the number of new players it would not surprise me to learn that there were 25,000.

It is good to know that from the President and the first lady of the land down to the schoolboy golfer on the public links American citizens are enjoying the game.

British golfers have suffered heavily in the war. Those of us who knew personally the amateurs and professionals who have paid the ultimate price have found our own golf year saddened.

It cannot be said that any one golfer towered above the others this year, for, although, with perhaps one exception, all of the leading golfers had their notable victories, they also had notable defeats, or entered too few tournaments to make the necessary average for individual seasonal supremacy. I believe that the average standard of play has been higher than usual.

Robert Gardner's success in the national, winning the title after a whole week of fine play against strong adversaries, has given the West much pleasure and encouragement.

Jerome Travers known as a poor medal player, electrified his friends by his brilliant victory in the national open.

TRAVIS AN ABSENTEE.

Walter Travis won the Metropolitan with a fine display of skill, and I was forced to play about the best golf of my life to win the Western title.

Francis Ouimet appeared to be experiencing this year "the consciousness of a golfing reputation" and won only a state title.

Walter Travis failed to attend the national for the first time in twenty years, and Fred Herreshoff marked his first absence since 1904.

Maxwell Marston is said to have played with fine skill in twenty-five tourneys, mostly in the East. Nationally he is known by the clever manner in which he put out Travers at Detroit.

Ned Sawyer, until he was fairly slaughtered by a fellow townsman, Gardner, had played the finest golf in the Detroit tournament.

Southern golfers have reason to rejoice over the fine showing made by Nelson Whitney and Reuben Bush at Detroit. Just here it is well to say that Texas deserves a little mention all to itself, for it is developing into a strong golfing State. Charles Dexter of Dallas won the Southern championship and George Rotan of Waco was one of the national qualifiers.

An innovation was the team match between the players of the East and West that took place just before the national. It is to be hoped that this competition will be continued every year. The West, of course, was glad to win the first event.

Another 1915 event of great importance was the P. P. I. E. championship last Spring. Any event that brings the Pacific coast golfers closer to the Middle West is of great significance. The fact that the title was won by Harry Davis of San Francisco against a brilliant field shows the high quality of golf out there.

Alden Swift won the trans-Mississippi title this year.

I am glad to say that more attention was paid to professional golf in 1915 and more and more generous purses were put up for the play.

Our women golfers have enjoyed a successful and enthusiastic year. The Western championship which was played over the Midlothian course was won by Miss Elaine Rosenthal of Ravisloe, who played a fine game.

Mrs. Vanderbeck's playing in the National was a fine week-long exhibition of good golf. A feature of the event was the playing of Alexa Stirling, the young Southern golfer. A Chicago player, Miss Ernestine Pearce, reached the semi-finals.

Matty Still a Wonder Huggins Lauds 'Big Six'

"THERE'S just one difference between the Christy Mathewson of today and the Christy Mathewson of five and ten years ago," said Miller Huggins, manager of the Cardinals.

[illegible] Matty of today no longer possesses a fast ball, that, and that alone, is the reason for his lost effectiveness. In the old days, when Matty's arm was in its prime, he had a wonderfully fast ball. He rarely used it, but whenever he did, it was with telling effect. He used it only to 'cross' the [illegible] he did cross them for years. Now that the speed ball is gone, Matty no longer is as effective as in the old days, but even at that he's still a wonder.

[illegible] expert [illegible] he set up a wonderful record.

BOOSTS BOB BESCHER.

Huggins tossed a bouquet at Bob Bescher, the veteran Cardinal outfielder, when he said:

"Bescher does not steal as many bases these days as he used to steal when he was younger and lighter, but he steals as many bases as ever in [illegible] as any man in the game and those are the thefts that count.

"Bescher uses his head now more than he used to do. He recognizes the fact that it is foolish for him to try to steal a base when the trick will not help his team's chances. He steals now only when that steal means something.

"I always have admired a player who gives his club the best that is in him at all times, but I don't want any of my men to take unnecessary chances of temporary injury or permanent crippling when there is no need for it. The trouble with most youngsters is that they are too eager and by their very eagerness they make mistakes and oftentimes pull 'boners.'

"CONSERVE ENERGY."

"Bescher in his earlier days used to try to steal bases whether his club was neck to neck, ten runs ahead or ten runs behind. He stole bases because he wanted to compile a base-stealing record. But he has learned that unnecessary exertion at a time when nothing is at stake does not help his team's chances for victory. And so he steals only when a steal will help. He no longer wastes his energy.

"The men who have lasted longest in baseball are those who have conserved their energy, have used it only when needed. Mathewson, Wagner, Lajoie and the other veterans are instances. No one every saw Matty pitching his arm off when there was no need for it. If his team got away with a big lead in the early part of the game he took things easy. He saved his arm.

"And Matty is still in the game while hundreds of men, with arms that seemed to be as powerful as his, but whose brains were a somewhat minus quality, have gone and been forgotten.

HUGGINS STILL A STAR.

Huggins didn't include himself in the list of veterans whose brains have enabled them to linger under the big tent many years beyond the allotted time. Modesty wouldn't permit it. But, just the same, Huggins ranks in the Matty, Wagner and Lajoie class—a wonderful, mechanical player and even more wonderful as to brains.

Huggins Under Alias in His Rookie Days

St. Louis, Mo., Jan. 8.—It is not generally known that Miller Huggins, manager of the St. Louis Cardinals, masqueraded under an alias in the early nineties, before he broke into big league circles.

Huggins was known as James M. Proctor when he played on the St. Paul Club. He couldn't use the family name because his father objected to a professional baseball career for his son.

The elder Huggins had no idea that his son would ever become a big leaguer, so he advised him to stay out of baseball and practice law, but his son became a star two years later. The proud parent forgave him and Huggins dropped the alias.

Big Green Shuts Out Tech by 2-0 Score

Hanover, N. H., Jan. 8.—With ideal weather conditions prevailing, Dartmouth for the second time this season defeated the M. I. T. [illegible] today, [illegible] Both teams at times showed flashes of team work and speed. The opportunities for scores were about evenly divided, but the combination of Captain H. F. Morse at point and Morse minding goal was invincible and turned the tide in favor of the Green.

[illegible] scored first for Dartmouth after five minutes of play. His work at rushing the puck the length of the ice was spectacular.

In the second half things went along fairly evenly until Holmes ran the puck close to the visitors' goal, then passed it back to Marchie, who shot a pretty goal.

Tech played a fine game of hockey and it was only due to an occasional slackening up of their fast pace that Dartmouth was able to pierce their goal for two scores. The lineup:

Kearns Mystery Baffles Waltham Man's Friends

TEN-DAY SEARCH WITHOUT CLEWS

Ex-Mayor, Once a Stage Hand and Bill Poster, Faced Many Hardships During Rise to Fame

Defeat for Re-election, Following Several Bereavements, Is Thought to Have Overcome Him

At the opening of the tenth day since the disappearance of Mayor Thomas F. Kearns of Waltham—Mr. Kearns is now the "ex"-Mayor—the people of the Watch City are divided into at least two groups on the subject of the reason for His Honor's departure and his present whereabouts.

Some believe "Tom" Kearns is dead. Many of these expect that his body will be found today when, with the factories shut down, the Charles River will be dragged all the way from Bemis station down to Galen street bridge, in Watertown.

Others hold that Mr. Kearns is in the land of the living and in good time will return; to take up his life and his duties.

Both of these Waltham camps are divided into groups. The first camp, ready to criticize the police, the city government, the militiamen and the boy scouts—for Waltham is made up of as many different kinds of people as any other city of 30,000 people and has its full quota of grandstand critics—were saying last night that altogether too little had been done on the tip from New York which reported that on Saturday, January 1, a passenger who called himself "Dan" McLaughlin, and who claimed to have come from "Boston," jumped overboard from the steamship Monterey, en route from New York to the Bahamas.

It is known to have been the custom of Mayor Kearns—up to the time of his going to City Hall as Chief Executive—to run over to New York every year for two or three days of life in the great metropolis.

It is also said to have been Mr. Kearns's habit, on these occasions, to travel to Newtonville by trolley and there board a Boston & Albany train.

It is not to be denied that his defeat by Eben J. Williams early in December by 700 votes or more was a great shock to Mr. Kearns.

His Honor felt that his friends had

Gibbons Lacks Confidence in Gen. Carranza

By International News Service.

Baltimore, Jan. 8.—"They will never cease fighting in Mexico under Carranza. I have no confidence in the man."

Thus did Cardinal Gibbons express his opinion of the situation today when talking to a delegation of prominent San Antonio business and professional men, who are in the city in the interest of the bi-centennial of the Texas city in 1918.

"The situation there," said the Cardinal, "is a crime against civilization. We have tried in every way to get help to those suffering from the warring factions in Mexico, and even now have $20,000 in hand to help them, but we cannot send it to them."

GREEKS AROUSED BY SEIZURE OF MELOS

By International News Service.

Berlin, Jan. 8.—Greek public opinion is highly excited over the occupation of the Island of Melos by the Entente powers, says the Overseas News Agency. "Athens reports there is especial cause for indignation because the entente powers did not request permission of Greece, as on former occasions, but simply declared the island was needed for naval purposes."

Favor Shorter Auto Route to Worcester

A new auto route from Boston to Worcester is recommended by the Massachusetts Highway Commission in its annual report, submitted to the Legislature yesterday. The commission also sets forth the expediency of utilizing convict labor for highway construction.

The proposed route from Boston to Worcester is over Huntington avenue to Wellesley, Framingham and Westboro. It is three miles shorter than the present route through Wayland, Sudbury and Marlboro. About eleven miles of new road would have to be built.

"It would undoubtedly be a very good thing for the community," the commission says, if more convicts could be put to work out of doors and thereby be helped to regain their self-respect and health and the habit of working.

DECLARES GARDNER CHARGES RECKLESS

Washington, Jan. 8.—Another flurry of international debate disturbed the House for a few minutes today. Representative Allen of Ohio denounced charges made yesterday by Representative Gardner as to German-American plots as "reckless and unfounded." Representative Sherley, one of the Democratic leaders, insisted upon placing in the record the President's statement that the offenders against neutrality were only a small number compared to the large number of naturalized citizens in the country.

PACT WITH RUSSIA AND FRANCE AIM OF KAISER

Prince Hohenlohe Reported to Be Working in Switzerland on Emperor's Separate Peace Plans

Object Is to Leave England Alone to Face Germans, with a Drive on India as the First Move

By C. F. BERTELLI.
Staff Correspondent of the International News Serivce.

Paris, Jan. 8.—A radical change in the German strategy which has already begun to take effect in the Balkans, and which involves the first official admission of a breakdown in the campaign against France and Russia, is foreshadowed by reports reaching Paris from Switzerland, which are credited in well-posted quarters here.

Prince Hohenlohe, disguising his identity with the title "Count Kraft," is the Kaiser's chief commissioner with Prince Buelow working in Switzerland for a separate peace with France and Russia, which would leave Germany's hands free to combat Great Britain's steadily-growing military strength.

Prince Hohenlohe reports [illegible] Kaiser [illegible] war [illegible] direction [illegible] believes that [illegible] front [illegible] that what his army could not do in 1915 against France it is unlikely to do in 1916.

TESTED STRENGTH.

The sporadic [illegible] turn of the year was merely the result of orders he had issued to his generals to test the present strength of the Franco-British lines. Nowhere could a weak spot be found, a fact which caused the Kaiser no surprise.

As regards the eastern front his plans for a renewed anti-Russian offensive early in the spring have been dropped because, with dwindling of effectives opposing Russia's swelling man-power, Germany's chances of a decisive triumph are not great enough to justify the carnage a new onslaught against the Muscovites would entail.

Such an offensive was put beyond the range of possibility when the Franco-British expeditionary force got safely within the Salonica lines and the French premier, M. [illegible] swung the [illegible] of using the port [illegible] for an ultimate [illegible].

Premier Briand's policy [illegible] Germany to [illegible] more completely than the Kaiser had hoped.

BLUFF IN BALKANS.

The best German opinion reaching Paris from Switzerland admits that Germany's Balkan program was largely a bluff which Briand called when he triumphed on his Salonica stand.

Unable to rely solely on the Bulgarians and the Turks to defeat Franco-British forces [illegible] should [illegible] continue to hang on while her hereditary enemies [illegible] her soil, the Kaiser is compelled to divert to the Vardar valley men who would otherwise have been employed in stemming the Russian tide which is expected to rise to its high[illegible] stage early in the summer.

Herr Ballin, head of the Hamburg-American line, leads the opposition which insists that Germany shall live or die in its attempt to hold a portion of the Belgian coast [illegible] giving her ample North Sea seaboard for the future development of Germany's naval policy and her overseas trade.

A war council attended by the leading men of the empire is reported to have been held in Berlin during the turn of the year, and is said to have weighed all the possibilities of the situation and to have decided in favor of the Kaiser's newest [illegible] which consists in a supreme attempt at bluffing France and Russia into the belief that Germany is the possessor of tremendous latent strength sufficient to intimidate them into acceptance of a peace which would leave the impression that both countries had emerged honorably from the trial of arms.

"The pact of London would thus be torn up," says Prince Hohenlohe, who is now at Geneva, "and the Kaiser would be free to act with Turkey in the Balkans, in Asiatic Turkey, Persia and Egypt without danger of Rumanian intervention against him.

BRITISH POLICIES IN GREECE LAID BARE

Captured Mail of Diplomats at Athens Reveals Contempt for Hellenes and Their King

Small Regard for the Rights of a Neutral Nation Shown in Terms of Demands by Entente

By AUGUSTUS F. BEACH,
Special Correspondent of the International News Service.

[illegible] Jan. 8.—On December [illegible] [illegible] Austrian submarine [illegible] Mediterranean. [illegible] officers were [illegible] Napier [illegible] military attache [illegible] Bulgarian [illegible] assigned to [illegible] Athens [illegible] Captain W[illegible] member of the [illegible] Parliament [illegible] from Athens [illegible] London.

A [illegible] was fished up and brought in. The courier pouch contained, besides some letters of the British Embassy in Athens, a number of private letters from members of the naval department in Greece and members of the embassy to relatives and friends in England.

Among the official correspondence was a report of the English ambassador at Athens, under date of November 26. This report deserves particular attention as it contains a postscript the demands which the Entente powers have directed to the Greek government.

These demands are in flagrant contradiction of the phrase so often [illegible] in Great Britain to the effect that the entente observes the rights of small nations and neutrals.

The same lack of respect towards Greece and her fundamental institutions, even toward the Greek sovereign, is evident in many places in the private correspondence—a fact all the more important as the people [illegible] are all members of the diplomatic corps accredited to the Greek government or are connected with the English Admiralty.

CAPTURED REPORT.

It is against the principles of the Austro-Hungarian government to publish private letters even from their enemies. Therefore, in the correspondence which I am now permitted to make public, private names have been omitted and the excerpts are limited to those which seem best to characterize the political [illegible] and speech of the British diplomats and marine officers in question.

I am further authorized to state that the government will confiscate [illegible] the official correspondence of the [illegible] British embassy in Athens. It will forward to Great Britain, through the American embassy in Vienna, the private correspondence of the members of the British embassy and of English naval officers in Greek service.

Following is the captured embassy report:

From Sir F. Elliot, English ambassador in Athens, to Sir Edward Grey.

Athens, 26th November, 191[illegible]

With reference to my telegram No. 1317 of today, I have the honor of submitting a copy of the document which my French colleague presented this morning to the ministry with the representatives of Great Britain, Italy and Russia, and which contains a discussion of the points on which concessions are demanded of the Greek government.

With expressions of my highest respect.

Allies Now Master Germans in Science, Declares Marconi

Advantage in Flying, Submarines, Zeppelins and Big Guns Overcome, Says Inventor

Returns from Trip to Front Reporting French Batteries Are Better Than German

Entente Powers Are Using Many Inventions Whose Secrets Are Closely Guarded

Copyright Underwood & Underwood, N. Y.

By GUGLIELMO MARCONI,
Famous Italian Inventor of Wireless Telegraphy.

Paris, Dec. 21.—It has been said that since August, 1914, so many new scientific discoveries have been placed at the disposal of the armies fighting in Europe that all former principles of strategy and tactics have been upset.

It is undeniable that science was one of the principle factors of the early German successes. We were surprised by the scientific preparation of the Kaiser's armies, but now we are as strong as they on this ground.

Take their inventions one by one, and you will see how. First, their poison gases. This barbarous invention astonished us at the outset, but it is certain that the allies now possess the means of giving back more than they get.

Allies Surpass in Flying.

As to flying, Germany began with remarkable machines and skilful pilots, but the allies quickly caught up with them and have now surpassed them. The recent bombardment of German towns proves as much.

Quite recently the Germans made a fresh effort to take the lead again. They have built giant machines with every new improvement. These aeroplanes are interesting in several respects—their wireless apparatus, for instance—but as soon as these machines came over the French lines French pilots captured several, so that the Germans have lost their advantage in this respect.

The Zeppelins are good for shelling towns, but are of no military value.

Germany has not proved brilliant at sea except in the employment of her submarines, which are very well put together. They owe a lot to their Diesel engines, which are said to give good results. But the allies, too, have worked marvels with their submarines, and thanks to the precautions they have taken against attacking under-water boats the Germans have not been able to sink a warship for months.

At the beginning of the war Germany had a superiority over the allies in heavy guns. That is no longer the case.

Calls French Guns Superior.

I have just spent a fortnight passing up and down the French front, and I perceived this magnificent fact—that everywhere, in Flanders, the Argonne, Alsace and Champagne, French batteries have the mastery of the Krupp artillery.

The German wireless stations are inferior to the allies. The most powerful station in the world is now in England.

Aside from the above, a great number of inventions are in use daily along the allies' front. If people do not hear so much about them as of German inventions, the reason is that we keep our secrets better.

The Germans have a great number of factories, workshops and laboratories. They are well equipped and have nearly always been able to replace the raw material they lack (cotton, for instance, which is used for making explosives, has been replaced by wood pulp). But every day the allies are making fresh progress. Today they equal their enemies; the day is not far off when they will do better than the Germans.

The next war will most certainly be more scientific than this one. Engines of destruction are bound to grow more enormous and fantastic. Inventors are working everywhere to this end. Means are being devised to improve torpedoes and use them in other ways. For a long while efforts have been made to control sea torpedoes from a distance. It is difficult to do it, but not impossible. Finally, I have heard of an air torpedo for use by Zeppelins which a Swedish captain is said to have invented.

Great Power in Electricity.

All this is not much when we reflect that electricity has great surprises in store for us. Electricity has infinite power, yet it has not yet been employed as an arm of destruction.

I don't say we shall see in the future battlefields without guns, rifles, grenades or bombs, but theoretically it is possible. It is obvious that if electrical apparatus could be invented to throw out waves such distances as to blow up powder, we should see some extraordinary things.

One man placing two wires in contact might blow up battleships at sea, munition depots and arsenals in a single minute.

Suddenly, as though with a magic wand, ammunition boxes would blow up on the battlefield and shells explode in the very mouths of guns. Cartridges would spontaneously go off in the soldier's belt. This would mean a reversion to bayonet or sword fighting.

The most fantastic dreams of Jules Verne and Wells are of little count compared with the possibilities modern science opens up.

I am now working on war inventions and not an apparatus that will enable men to see through walls, as has been said. My activities are being bent to things of more immediate value.

URGES A WORLD'S COURT TO END WAR

John Hays Hammond Says U. S. Is Pre-eminently Ordained to Lead Neutrals in Peace League

Would Enforce Its Mandates by Economic Pressure and a Code of "International Ostracism"

Opposes Huge Armaments, but Admits, Under Present Conditions, Need of Preparedness

JOHN HAYS HAMMOND of Gloucester, the internationally famous publicist, has written an article for the AMERICAN urging the establishment of a league to end all wars and to enforce peace. He also urges that the United States take the leadership in bringing all neutral nations at once into this League of Peace.

Mr. Hammond has made a profound study of his subject and hence can treat it as can few other men here or abroad. His, too, has been an uncommonly broad experience in world affairs—his name is a household word. He occupies one of the highest places in the engineering fraternity of the world, both in the matter of technical and academic training and in the field of great achievement. He is a creator of great commercial enterprises—he is a man who DOES things. He has been often called the man with the big brain.

In his article he makes these points:

The science of war has been assiduously developed; the science of peace has been woefully neglected.

The nation is defenceless when "might becomes right."

Neither political neutrality nor geographical isolation exempts from economic losses which threaten national bankruptcy.

The maintenance of peace is a problem vital in import and world-wide in extent.

Publicity is what is needed in international relations.

Unpreparedness has not availed to assure a nation's integrity against the exigencies of modern warfare.

Neutral nations have a common peril; in a World Court they would have a common safety.

The United States is pre-eminently the nation to lead the movement for a World Court.

Mr. Hammond's article follows:

By JOHN HAYS HAMMOND.

IN spite of this most terrible tragedy in the history of civilization, which has all but uprooted the Christian faith that is in us, let us not despair. We have not gone back to barbarism, notwithstanding the assertions of those of little faith.

Let us take renewed courage in the reflection—and there is incontrovertible evidence to that effect—that the world's ethical standards are higher, the cardinal virtues more universal than ever before in the record of humanity.

There is to-day more religious freedom, more allowance for racial differences, more earnest desire for a better understanding and for community of interest than ever before in international relations.

Wars in the past did not excite the horror that is to-day universal even among non-combatant nations. War in generations past

"But why? Because of the dreadful alliance of British democracy with Russian bureaucracy, of British [illegible] erty with Russian tyranny. Because Russia is the ally of Great Britain British censorship has been more complete and thorough-going than Russian censorship. Things said and done in Russia have been reported by Russian newspapers. They are quite commonplace there. The sturdy, liberty-loving men and women of England and Wales and Scotland would think them damnable.

"And so the British press has been muzzled. Out of consideration for the alliance with Russia, Great Britain has winked at massacre, the United States has been silent. And having been silent as to Russian atrocities America finds herself dumb in the presence of Armenian butcheries. She cannot raise her voice too loudly. She cannot thunder in the ear of Germany: 'Bid the Turk stop this devil's work!' Germany would reply: 'You never said to Great Britain, "Bid your Russian ally cease his devil's work"; you had best keep silence.' And our mouth is closed."

CRITICISM IS JUST.

[Dr. Aked's indignation is just. At the time of the acute Jewish persecutions in Southern Russia three years ago, during the trial of Beiliss at Kiev for ritual murder, the AMERICAN could not obtain trustworthy reports either of the Jewish massacres by the Russians or of the trial of Beiliss because England did not wish to offend the sensibilities of her Russian ally and all the sources of news controlled by British news agencies or diplomatists were under a sort of censorship.

TITLED WOMEN AID LONDON BAZARS

London, Jan. 8.—Bazaars are the craze of the moment in London, and the best known and prettiest women in society are naturally the most in request as sellers. Those bazaars are luckiest which can secure such stall holders as the Duchess of Portland, Duchess of Marlborough, the Duchess of Rutland, Lady Anglesey and her sisters, especially perhaps, Lady Diana Manners, who is invariably a "draw" at any such affair.

Lady Diana has started quite a furore by designing and making trousseau garments, which are eagerly bought up at bazaars where she sells. The fashion has been followed and the prettiest women now sell lingerie of their own making. It is also the fashion for everything to be very cheap—shop price and no more.

FRENCH WAR DEATH RATE IS HALVED

By International News Service.

Paris, Jan. 8.—The death from wounds in the war is less than half what it was last year. The explanation is that hardship and exposure has toughened the men until they can stand twice as much as they could when the war began. Dr. Jacques Bertellon, in a report today declared that in 1914 the death rate in military hospitals was 48 per cent. of every 1,000 wounded patients. Now it is less than 30.

Nerves Gone, Troops Fighting in Trenches Are Unfit for Battle

Dr. Van Dyne of Boston Tells How Soldiers Are Wrecked on the Battle Line.

Thousands of soldiers are incapacitated for duty in the trenches in [illegible] by [illegible] Oliver Van Dyne of No. 19 Arlington street, who has returned from London, where he went for hospital work.

[illegible] interested in the nervous conditions of disabled sol- [illegible] made that his special study while in London, and he [illegible] to tell of his observations.

Dr. Van Dyne declared that many of [illegible] to fight [illegible] shot to pieces," so far as their nerves [illegible] He said the effects of this "nervous disturbance" was seen in a number of [illegible] body sores, hallucinations, and so on. [illegible] have not been injured by shot or shell, but suffer from trench life, from the [illegible] the terrible ex- [illegible] the horrible things they see. Dr. Van Dyne estimated that about twenty per cent. of the disabled soldiers suffered [illegible] disorders due to "nervous disturbance."

SOUND IN BODY.

"I saw many of these soldiers," said Dr. Van Dyne [illegible] appeared to be [illegible] expression. The causes were so numerous [illegible] that I found it a tremendously absorbing study, offering [illegible] opportunity for research work.

[illegible] to all outward appearances, were perfectly sound [illegible] they became [illegible] thought to be malingerers, but when their true condition became known they were found to be proper subjects for treatment and scientific study.

[illegible] deaf or blind, some had sores, seemingly cancerous, some had spots that looked like bruises. There were some that suffered paralysis of a leg or an arm; but examination of their bodies revealed no evidences of a wound of any kind. Others had hallucinations; and many were generally unstrung.

"The causes—or some of them—are dampness, unsanitary living, the noise and the general awfulness of fighting and trench life.

[illegible] causes, all or any one of them, set up a disturbance in the body, probably in the brain, resulting in a derangement of the functions [illegible] trophic nerves.

TROPHIC NERVE AFFECTED.

"The trophic nerves enable the body to feed on the blood that flows through it. If these nerves of the arm are injured the arm will wither, but it will not die, it becomes paralyzed. If you destroy the trophic nerve in a tooth the tooth turns black. An injury to a trophic nerve may cause a sore.

"This is no new discovery resulting from the war. Here in Boston we have a multitude of such cases. I simply went abroad to make a study of the results of the war so far as the nerves of the men are concerned. But every physician in his private practice has many such cases."

Asked about hospital methods of treating these disorders in London, Dr. Van Dyne said the treatment as yet was in the observation stage, with plenty of rest and good food for the sick men.

HORROR ALWAYS PRESENT.

"One of the soldiers when I sought a history of his case, told me that in one of the battles in which he took part, the Germans came forward in solid formation [illegible] simply mowed down by the British machine gun fire," said Dr. Van Dyne. "He said the slaughter was so terrible that always afterward he saw those men dropping. He said he felt he could never return to the trenches. He was simply unstrung for his experiences."

Dr. Van Dyne said the condition of the disabled men had nothing to do with their bravery; that they were in all likehood fighters of the bravest spirit. He called their condition "one of the many tragic by-products of the war."

"While I was in London, the papers printed a story of a soldier who was deaf and whose hearing was restored," said Dr. Van Dyne. "They said this man had gone to a theatrical performance one night, that there was an explosion of some sort in the play and that suddenly his hearing returned. However, I know nothing about that matter."

TELLS HORRORS OF WAR ALONG BELGIAN FRONT

French Tourist Recites Details of Tragedies from Electrified Wires.

By International News Service Correspondent.

London, Jan. 8.—A Frenchman who recently made a tour along the Dutch-Belgian frontier gives me a very graphic description of conditions there.

"One would need the pen of an Edgar Allan Poe," he writes, "to describe the horrors of the dramas enacted along that stretch of barbed wire electrified with thousands of volts by the Germans. This cruel barrier which feeds on human flesh devours friend and foe alike—miserable Belgians trying to escape from the German rule of terror, smugglers, German deserters and poachers.

"The Dutch papers hardly ever mention these dramas, which are constantly enacted, the electrocutions being evidently looked upon as of merely local interest.

"On the German side it is even worse, and no one will ever know the dreadful number of those who have been killed by coming into contact with the death-dealing wire. The German sentries who guard the frontier to prevent anyone from escaping from the inferno, which was once the free and independent country of Belgium, perform their duties in the most perfunctory manner.

"At certain points there are, with regular intervals, guards stationed. A bell gives the alarm when an 'accident' has happened and a patrol slowly starts towards the place where some unfortunate individual has paid with his life for his craving for freedom or perhaps merely for his carelessness. The bodies of course have to be removed and the German soldiers do this without unnecessary fuss. While one of them with a thousand precautions in order not to be electrocuted himself, takes down the body from the wires, two others in the meantime have already dug a grave, as shallow as possible, in which the victim is buried covered with only a few inches of dirt.

"How many bodies have they buried thus? They do not know and they care even less.

"I saw one place where recently a gang of smugglers got three cans of sardines across the wire in the night. These were picked up on the German side under the eyes, undoubtedly, of the German soldiers. Three-fourths of the goods had already been thrown across when a Dutch frontier guard appeared and fired point blank at the smugglers, killing the leader of the gang.

"His widow, who was pointed out to me later, a woman in deep mourning, honors the memory of her late husband of continuing his trade. She risks her young life, to be sure, but she makes a pile of money and this is inducement enough to her."

MILITIA NEWS

The new armory on Commonwealth avenue will soon be occupied by the mounted "outfits," and already several of them have moved company and corps effects there. The horses of the artillery, ten of which are allowed all the year round for each battalion, will be housed in the new building, next to the Braves' ball park. The horses of Troop C, of which Captain Dana T. Gallup is the commander, probably will be taken from the Natick Riding Club, where they have been housed, and kept in the new armory. This troop owns several mounts, and has paid for them and their keep by renting them out at their troop-owned stable in Natick.

Company E of the Sixth Regiment will present the military drama "Santiago" at Framingham on January 20. This company has been active in the social life of the militia for the past few seasons.

Catain Hugh Maguire, custodian of the East Armory, headquarters of the Ninth Regiment, is making extensive alterations for the several indoor baseball and basketball teams of the regiment housed there. The different athletic teams of the Ninth Regiment which will take part in our annual Winter athletic meet are being formed, and the company relay teams are now complete. The meet will take place Washington's Birthday.

Hammond Advocates World Court to Protect Neutrals was waged confessedly, if not avowedly, for conquest. To-day wars are waged by profession, at least, for a righteous cause.

To-day a desire for the respect of their fellow beings induces even warring nations to make earnest efforts to vindicate each its cause, for the special reason that there is such a contrast between the enormity of war and the high ethical standards of the age in which we live.

Atrocities unspeakable in character have been committed. This is unfortunately true, but these are the sporadic outbursts of the latent savagery which is aroused and made manifest by war, rather than in conformity with [illegible] decreed practice.

Such atrocities are irrepressible, for war is truly Hell. But, even atrocities do not justify a sweeping indictment of the morality of modern civilization and far less of Christianity itself.

"WAR A STAIN ON 20TH CENTURY CIVILIZATION."

Nevertheless, all wars in this age are an abomination. They are an ineffable stain upon the escutcheon of the vaunted civilization of our twentieth Christian century. For this stain, the system controlling international relations is responsible, not the individual belligerents.

The science of war has been assiduously developed; the science of peace has been woefully neglected. God-given genius has prostituted its inventive faculty to the destructive methods of war, while only mediocrity has characterized efforts to prevent war.

The present unspeakable conflict has brought with it a vivid realization of how unintelligent our present methods are, how pitifully we lack in the field of international relations the most elementary machinery for the redress of grievances and for the avoidance of conflict such as is provided in the international organization of the State.

The individual is safeguarded, the nation is defenseless, when 'might becomes right.'

From the war we learn many lessons. No [illegible] has a monopoly of patriotism [illegible] courage. Men of all classes have responded promptly and zealously to the call of their respective rulers, to defend, as was represented to them, the integrity of their beloved countries. With [illegible] undaunted courage [illegible] the soldiers, men of every race and creed, vying for the triumph of that cause to which they have consecrated their lives.

INTERDEPENDENCE OF NATIONS WAR'S LESSON.

From the war we learn also the interdependence of the nations of the world, and how inextricably their vital material interests are interwoven.

Every civilized nation suffers from the evils of a great war. The higher the civilization, the more intense and the more widespread the suffering entailed. Neither political neutrality nor geographic isolation gives exemption from economic loss—losses threatening national bankruptcy.

The maintenance of peace is, therefore, a problem vital in import and worldwide in extent—a problem not only for the present but for the future generations, for wars of to-day mortgage posterity.

For this reason, let me digress for a moment to say that, however much we incline to shrink from the horrors of the battle field, I believe it is our duty to impress these very horrors upon the youth of the present day and upon coming generations, that their conception of war be undeceived as to its heroism and glory, but, rather, that their minds be saturated with the folly, the cruelty and the waste of war.

We should impress upon the perverted ambition of youth the fact that bravery, self sacrifice and heroism in the pacific fields of human endeavor are equally deserving of the Victoria Cross and the Iron Cross, conferred for achievement upon the destructive fields of bloody battle.

WOULD DISCARD SECRET DIPLOMACY FOR PUBLICITY.

While the propaganda for world peace has been one of the steps necessary for its realization, it is now time to take concrete action, rather than to moralize and to expatiate upon the evils of war.

We Pacifists, if we are to dominate the situation and to supplant the institutions of war by those of peace, must submit a practical plan for the maintenance of peace, and be no longer content with pacifists' platitudes.

Diplomacy has failed utterly. Its inherent fatuity has led purblind nations into a cataclysm of folly. Considerations—religious, humane, economic—have, it is true, combined to make war less probable, but no consideration has availed as yet to make war impossible.

Ententes and alliances to maintain that political fetish, the balance of power, have tended to establish only a more sensitive and a more unstable, not a more effective, political equilibrium.

Diplomacy, still affected by its Machiavellian traditions, must now be discarded for a system of international relations where there will be no [illegible] contemptible espionage and no more secret treaties between nations, but where, on the contrary, all agreements and all treaties are to be recorded upon a register in the custody of a great court of international justice, open to [illegible] world.

Publicity, the sunlight of God's truth, is what is needed in international relations!

Such publicity, recognizing unqualifiedly, unmistakably, the mutual obligations of the members of the entente on the one hand and of the allies on the other we now know would have prevented the present war. This is evidenced by Germany's admission that the line-up was far different from what she had expected. I refer to the attitude of both England and Italy in Germany's diplomatic miscalculations.

NEED OF WORLD COURT OF SETTLEMENT.

Arbitration, while of inestimable value in facilitating international harmony, is inadequate to maintain international peace. It is open to serious objection as to the selection of arbitrators and as to the character of its awards, which partake too much of the nature of diplomatic negotiations and of a compromise of the issues.

The creation of a world court for the pacific settlement of international disputes is undoubtedly prerequisite—a condition precedent—to the limitation of reduction of armaments.

Hugh armaments, while not a direct cause of war, undoubtedly do tend to develop that spirit of militarism which is provocative of war. Moreover, huge armaments greatly increase the efficiency of organized slaughter and immeasurably aggravate the ravages of war when hostilities begin.

"Armed peace" is an inverted pyramid propped up by huge armaments. In its economic aspect it is second, in disastrous consequences only to war itself.

The great Christian nations have been spending in preparation for war—or, to express it more euphemistically, for "armed peace"—upward of $1,500,000,000 annually up to the outbreak of the European war.

It is a futile expenditure in that it serves no useful purpose. It is a foolish expenditure in that the very object for which it is designed, military supremacy, is not attained, since no radical changes have been permanently effected in the relative strength of the competing powers.

It is a profligate—a wicked—expenditure, in that it diverts [illegible] sum of money from the alleviation of human suffering. Let me give a single example [illegible] instances could be mentioned indefinitely.

Every year the great white plague, tuberculosis causes 200,000 deaths in the United States. Authorities compute the annual [illegible] loss from invalidism and death due to tuberculosis at more than $1[illegible],000,000, through the devastating of American industry.

Let the same authorities affirm that an expenditure not to exceed $50,000,000 per annum—one-fifth of our military and naval budget—the cost of one day of the European war—would, in a few decades, suffice to practically eradicate tuberculosis in the United States.

This is one of the many highly profitable investments that could be made of but a small part of the money today expended in profligate armaments, which have become a constant menace to the peace of the world.

Has the nation more vital interests to safeguard than interests of this kind?

Yet, under the present conditions of international relations, many of us, however opposed to great armaments, believe the necessity exits of maintaining an adequate national defence until such time as the apprehension of war is so far removed, by minimizing the causes of war, that the universal reduction and limitation of armaments can be effected.

We don't believe that our national self-righteousness is an adequate defence against foreign aggression due to lack of appreciation of us.

We believe that neither national inoffensiveness nor military impotency—unpreparedness, as it is called—have availed to assure a nation's integrity against the exigencies of modern warfare.

ACTIVITIES OF PROPOSED WORLD COURT.

The project of a true international court is not new. It was adopted in principles by the forty-four States composing the Second Hague Conference in 1907; was endorsed by the Institute of International Law in 1912, and has received the hearty support of all the leading powers, including Great Britain and Germany.

It has been exhaustively studied at four annual conferences of the American Society for Judicial Settlement of International Disputes, by foreign governments and publicists. The project has also met with the approval of State Legislatures in the United States, of leading Chambers of Commerce and of representative educational and religious bodies. Everywhere all thoughtful men approve it.

Even the most sanguine advocates of a World Court do not cherish the delusion that such a court would absolutely guarantee world peace.

But it would minimize the danger of war by eliminating many issues that constitute a constant menace to peace, and in that way the proposed World Court would be not less effective in its particular function than is medicine in eradicating disease; education in abolishing ignorance, or religion in warring with wickedness.

Yet, who would contend that medicine, education and religion are not indispensable factors in human progress?

As to the function, the jurisdiction, and the composition of the court, there well may be a diversity of opinion; but there is unanimity of opinion as to its need. There are no irreconcilable views as to its creation.

As an expression of individual opinion I would state the plan that most forcibly commends itself to my views:

1. The creation of a World Court to deal only with justiciable questions.
2. The creation of an assembly (for which the name of "Council of Conciliation" has been suggested) to deal with non-justiciable questions.

Before engaging in hostilities the signatory nations should be compelled to submit all justiciable questions to the World Court, and non-justiciable questions to the Council of Conciliation. The Council of Conciliation should be empowered to decide whether the questions are justiciable or non-justiciable.

The World Court and the Council of Conciliation thus become co-ordinate branches of a League of Peace.

To compel the submission of disputes to the World Court or to the Council, the League of Peace would depend first upon the force of public opinion; secondly, upon economic pressure by a sort of international ostracism of "non-intercourse," or, third as a last resort, the employment of an international police force against the recalcitrant nation.

PRESSURE TO COMPEL SUBMISSION OF DISPUTE.

As to the enforcement of the judgment of the Court or the order of the Council of Conciliation, many of us believe that all nations would respond to the dictate of a World Court or of a Council of Conciliation, irrespective of the exercise or any constraining influence other than that of the public opinion of the rest of the world.

This program, I believe, is practical, whereas, it is very doubtful if we could obtain the agreement of the nations to the exercise of military force to compel obedience to the orders of the Court or Council in case non-compliance. This, however, would probably be a future enlargement of the power of the league.

A World Court would in time, undoubtedly, become representative of a world interest, subbordinating the narrow interests of any particular nation to the welfare of humanity at large. The judges would become world judges, animated by the highest patriotism—the welfare of mankind—not a tribunal prepossessed with national bias.

Many of us believe that the World Court can be established by the time of the termination of the present European war in connection with the discussion of the terms of peace. So, then, in time of war let us prepare for peace, that in time of peace we shall not again have to prepare for war.

OPPORTUNITY FOR NEUTRAL NATIONS.

The belligerent nations at that time would, we believe, be willing to subordinate minor difference of opinion for the realization of this ideal, which they will regard as indispensable to their welfare.

Since they all suffer from the evils of a great war, all neutral nations should make an insistent demand for the establishment of such a court. Neutral nations have a common peril. In a world court they would have a common safety.

We believe that America, because of her conspicuous advocacy of peace, her irreproachable neutrality, her commanding position in finance, industry and commerce, and especially because of her cosmopolitan population—comprising such large numbers racially affiliated with each of the warring nations—is pre-eminently the nation—the nation ordained by Providence to lead the World Court movement.

Brookline House Attracts Wide Attention
Structure an Adaptation of Colonial Type

Twenty-room structure built for L. L. Briggs at the corner of Chestnut Hill avenue and Dean road, Brookline. From plans by Architect Edward B. Stratton.

INCOME TAX WILL REDUCE REALTY TAX BURDENS

President Andrews of Tax Association Urges Real Estate Men to Support Measure.

The taxation burdens on real estate will be considerably reduced, Charles A. Andrews, president of the Massachusetts Tax Association and a former State deputy tax commissioner, told members of the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange, if an income tax law is adopted.

Mr. Andrews declared that the tax on real estate should be reduced and that the best way to do it would be to impose an income tax. He said that such has been the result in all States where the income tax has been adopted. He said:

"I believe that these principles should be kept in mind by the Legislature in changing the tax laws. A larger proportion of the total taxes should be paid by personal property. A larger number of owners of personal property should pay taxes. Reduce the amount of taxes paid by a few persons who under the old system had been paying taxes.

"You know that many owners of personal property do not pay taxes, and you, as owners of real estate, object to this situation. By keeping silent they evade the payment of taxes. You people, as owners of real estate, cannot do that.

REALTY MEN FEARFUL.

"There have been some representatives of real estate who have been fearful that if there is any change real estate will pay a larger proportion of taxes. Hence, they have objected to any change in the fundamental [illegible] the [illegible] that the inevitable result would be that real estate would pay a larger share of taxes. I do not know anybody, with the single exception of single-taxers, who wants real estate to pay a larger proportion of taxes. I believe that real estate ought to pay less, and I believe the best way to do it is to tax intangibles reasonably. When you establish a situation like that there is no reason to doubt that the experience of Massachusetts will be like that of other States. Real estate will contribute a smaller proportion of the [illegible]

"The O. K. of the people to the income tax referendum gives to the Legislature the power to tax incomes derived by citizens of Massachusetts at a uniform rate all over the Commonwealth.

"Heretofore towns like Cohasset have paid taxes at the rate of $12 per thousand, while Hamilton and Woburn have paid a tax rate of $35 or [illegible]. Hence, there has been tax-dodging and moving around always in the direction of the low tax rate. The result was that we have had a group of communities in which it is much more advantageous to live because of the low tax rate. Now the Legislature has power to tax at uniform rate the income which certain classes of property produce for their owners. It also has the power to tax salaries at different rates from incomes."

Plan $500,000 Apartment Block for Back Bay

Plans are being drawn by Architects Blackall, Clapp & Whittemore for a block and story apartment block to be erected by Joseph Rudnick and John Snider, trustees of the Charlesgate Trust, at the corner of Charlesgate West and Commonwealth avenue.

The structure, which will be eight stories high, will cost in the vicinity of half a million dollars above the ground and will constitute one of the costliest apartment houses ever erected in Boston.

The site of the proposed structures is considered one of the finest in the city for apartment house purposes. The building will overlook the Charles River and will command a view of the new Tech buildings in Cambridge. It will contain some ninety suites of two to five rooms. The smaller suites will contain one and the larger two bathrooms each. They will be so arranged that they may be combined into seven and eight room suites.

The front of the block will be of brick trimmed with stone, which will be blended with a dormer roof of green Spanish tile. The tract of land at the corner of Commonwealth avenue and Charlesgate West contains 17,375 square feet and is taxed on a valuation of $173,800.

BUYS FOUR LOTS

The Roman Catholic Archbishop of Boston has purchased the four lots of land containing 25,765 square feet on Pleasant street and Crowninshield road, Brookline, adjoining the rectory of St. Aidan's Church, of which the Rev. Dr. John T. Creagh is pastor. The total assessed valuation of this land is $11,900. John C. Kiley was the broker in this transaction.

Brookline House Cost $30,000 and Contains No Less Than Twenty Rooms.

[illegible] residence [illegible] completed at the corner of Chestnut Hill avenue and Dean road, Brookline, is attracting widespread attention. The house, a modification of the Colonial type of architecture, was designed by Edward B. Stratton, a Boston architect. It will cost in the neighborhood of $30,000. L. L. Briggs is the owner.

Setting up on an eminence and sloping sharply to the street level, the site of the house presented a difficult problem to the architect. He solved it by partially grading the lot and terracing the front.

The house contains about twenty rooms. Because of the high position of the house and the slope of the lot it was possible to plan three rooms in the basement—the chauffeur's room, laundry and music room.

On the first floor is a large reception hall, which leads to the living room on the right and the dining [illegible] den. In the right wing of the house is a sun room and in the left wing the conservatory and breakfast room.

The living room is finished in gumwood and paneled to the ceiling. There is an elaborate cement fireplace. The dining room is finished in mahogany, with a six foot paneled dado. The ceiling is beamed. The sun room is latticed. The principal feature is a fountain in the centre.

REALTY EXCHANGE ELECTS DIRECTORS

At the annual meeting of the Boston Real Estate Exchange and Auction Board the following were elected directors for the year 1916: Amory Eliot, Mark Temple Dowling, William J. McDonald, Frank H. Purington, Charles E. Wyzanski, Frederick L. McGowan, George S. Smith, Francis R. Bangs, John W. Dunlop, Reginald Boardman, Richard M. Saltonstall, Henry E. Russell, Renton Whidden, Nathan Matthews, A. Franklin Goodwin. Prescott Bigelow, Jr., was re-elected treasurer and Louis W. Parent clerk.

Winthrop Gains in Realty Sales and Building

Four hundred deeds conveying land or land and buildings in Winthrop were recorded last year at the Suffolk Registry of Deeds, an increase of twenty-three over the previous year according to Messrs. Elliot & Whittier, real estate agents of that town. Of these 217 were for property at Winthrop Centre, 129 in the beach section and fifty-four at the Highlands.

The number of mortgages was 488, aggregating $1,181,317, a decrease in number of thirty and an increase in amount of $351,079 over the 1914 figures. The mortgages ran as follows: seventy-[illegible] to savings banks and trust companies, [illegible] to co-operative banks and 232 to trustees and private individuals.

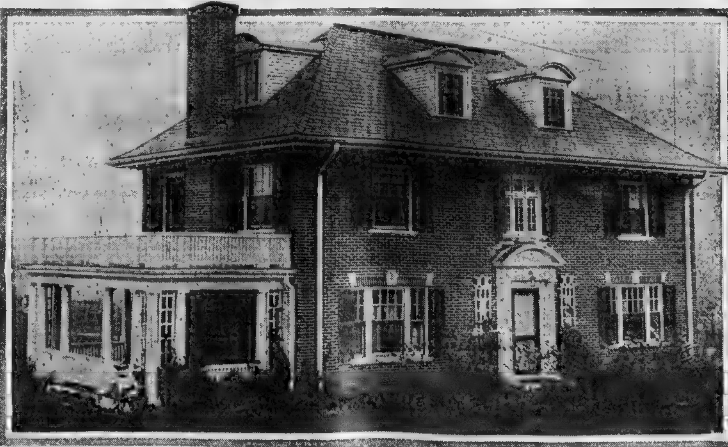
The building department issued 199 permits, 166 of which were for new buildings and 33 for alterations. Thirty-nine of the permits were for one family [illegible] and 23 for two suite houses. The new buildings are valued at $349,785, and the alterations at $132,670, or a total of $482,455, an increase of thirteen in number and $130,126 in value over last year.

A very large proportion of the increase was the result of building operations in the Beach and Highland sections.

BOSTON MAN BUYS FARM IN HUDSON

The Chapin Farm Agency has sold for William H. Davis the fruit farm situated on Marlboro road in the town of Hudson, comprising sixty acres of land, a new bungalow, large barn, packing house and other buildings. [illegible] Dodd of [illegible] is the purchaser.

Attractive Colonial Residence in Newton



Above is shown the attractive brick house constructed at No. 120 Farlow road, Newton, for Mrs. E. L. Hill. Harry Morton Ramsay was the architect. The structure is of pure Colonial architecture. The house is built of tapestry brick trimmed in white.

On the first floor is a reception hall leading to the living room and dining room, with kitchen in the rear. The color scheme throughout the house is white. On the second floor, over the living room, is a large chamber which leads through glass doors to a dressing room. On the other side is the guest's room. The third floor contains a large chamber and maid's room.

TRADE CROWDING OUT DWELLINGS ON HUNTINGTON AVE.

Remodeling of Hotel Nottingham Into Business Block Indicates March Uptown of Business.

The sale of the Hotel Nottingham on Huntington avenue and the announcement of the proposal to convert it into a business block is one of the most significant bits of real estate news which has come to light in recent years.

It indicates the rapid movement uptown of business and the increasing tendency of trade to supplant dwellings on Huntington avenue between Copley square and Massachusetts avenue.

Every year the [illegible] of business has [illegible] proportions. Gradually it [illegible] extended along Boylston street and Huntington avenue to Massachusetts avenue and beyond. Residences have been remodeled and pressed into service for trade purposes. Many business blocks have been erected. In Copley square alone a number of big business blocks involving an investment of several millions of dollars have been built to meet the increasing demand for stores and offices in the Back Bay district.

The new owners of the Nottingham are Charles A. Digney [illegible] Eliot, trustees of the Nottingham Trust, who took title from William P. Natale. The sale involves an investment of more than $500,000.

COST IS $150,000.

The remodeling of the hotel for business purposes will cost in the vicinity of $150,000. The architects, in planning the alterations, have sought to bring the structure [illegible] group of buildings which [illegible] made Copley square noted for its architectural beauty.

The Nottingham Chamber will contain [illegible] stores fronting on Copley square and Huntington avenue. The [illegible] fronts will be of plate glass [illegible] pilasters and cornices of [illegible] green marble. The new building will have an imposing front of light brick similar to that of the Copley Plaza and its appearance will be entirely changed by the improvements.

[illegible] upper floors [illegible] devoted to business offices which will be equipped in the most modern way. Two electric elevators will connect all floors. Many requests for space have already been received. Charles E. Greene is the architect.

REPORT SALE OF BIG TRACT IN BRIGHTON

The sale for improvement of another large tract of land in the Faneuil district of Brighton is reported through the office of W. J. McDonald. The property, which is located at the corner of Faneuil and Dunboy streets, consists of a mansion house, [illegible] and [illegible] square feet of land, having a frontage of 500 feet on Faneuil street, 410 feet on Dunboy street and 315 feet on Webster street. The estate was formerly owned by the late James W. Thompson.

The purchaser, [illegible] W. Stanley Tripp, intends to develop the property by erecting a number of single and two-family houses. It is the intention of Mr. Tripp to deed to the City of Boston about 15,000 square feet of land fronting on Faneuil street for the widening of that street.

The property is assessed for $26,700, of which $22,000 is on the land. The grantors were Horace G. Allen, et al, trustees, who were represented by A. [illegible] Bamford.

FRANCIS OUIMET LEASES HUB STORE

John C. Kiley has leased for Charles E. Cotting, trustee, to John H. Sullivan, the store at No. 52 Bromfield street. The premises will be occupied by J. H. Sullivan and Francis Ouimet, the well-known golf champion, as a store for the sale of sporting goods.

Expert Advice Free on All Real Estate Matters

Here is the way to secure information free, from the AMERICAN'S experts, regarding all real estate matters:

1—Write out the question clearly on postal or letter.
2—Sign your name and address, and a number under which the reply will appear.
3—Forward the query, addressed to the Real Estate Information Bureau, BOSTON AMERICAN.
4—Then watch the columns of this section every Sunday.

HINTS TO LAYMEN ON HOW TO BUY OR BUILD THAT HOUSE

Precautions Which Should Be Observed by Inexperienced Builder of Purchaser.

Address all questions to the Real Estate Information Bureau, Boston AMERICAN. Questions should be plainly written on only one side of the paper. Full name and address of the inquirer must appear, or the questions will be disregarded. Place on the inquiry a letter and a number, under which look for a reply. While using every endeavor to be accurate, the AMERICAN does not guarantee nor will it be held responsible for the accuracy of its replies. Where realty outside of the State is involved, answers may be subjected to delay of one or two weeks.

E. S. C.—The first step in the erection of the house you are planning is of course the procuring of your construction loan from a co-operative bank. You should have no difficulty in arranging for your loan, provided you own your lot outright and have enough cash on hand to finance the construction of the foundations. Conditions in the mortgage market are now favorable. There are a number of co-operative banks in Greater Boston which have large sums on hand seeking an outlet in mortgages.

After you have made arrangements to secure the loan, consult a competent, reliable architect. The services of an honest architect who knows his business would be the best safeguard you could get. In addition to planning the house he will protect your interests in letting the contracts, and will also see to it that the specifications are observed. The layman, with no knowledge of building, is at the mercy of a builder who may substitute inferior materials and skimp on the specifications without let or hindrance.

No. Contract built houses are not necessarily "jerry" built. This term is usually applied to frame "three flatters" thrown together by speculative builders who are anxious to get the house up as quickly and cheaply as possible, and sell it with the biggest profit.

F. 30—An excellent means of securing a good piece of real estate is to closely follow the real estate ads in the newspapers, both daily and Sunday. Reply to those which appear to offer the best bargains, and then make your selection. Here are a few suggestions which you may find helpful.

First, determine the net income by comparing the equity—that is the amount you actually invest in the house over and above the mortgage—with the income, minus expenses such as interest on mortgages, taxes, insurance, etc. The net income should be in the vicinity of 10 per cent, to provide against depreciation and the possibility of vacancies.

2. Look over the neighborhood. Determine how far the house is from transportation facilities. See how far it is from schools and churches. Ascertain if there are many "to let" signs hung out in the locality or whether the demand for apartments is good. Make sure that there are no nuisances in the vicinity of the house. Find out, if possible whether the general trend of values is up or down.

3. Look over the house carefully to ascertain whether it is well or poorly constructed, and whether it is in good or bad condition.

4. Be sure and have the title examined.

No. 50—You cannot compel the factory owner to pay the added cost of insurance. You will have to bear the burden yourself. It frequently happens that a factory or other building is erected which adds considerably to the fire hazard of a locality. Or such a building, if put up in a residential neighborhood, may depreciate property values. Provided that the owner has been properly granted a building permit and has obeyed all the local building ordinances and violated no restrictions, he is within his legal rights. And the abutting property owners must suffer the loss, whether from increased cost of insurance or depreciation. The time for the protest was when application for the permit was filed.

No. 23—By mail we are sending you the desired information.

R.E.H. 117—An increase of 100 per cent. in the value of the lot in a single year is obviously absurd. Since the man who made it owns the lot and wishes to sell it, the purpose of the statement is, of course, clear. What is the lot number and street on which the lot is situated, and how much does your friend want for it?

No. 10—File a claim with the claim department for the injuries to your property. If the railroad will not make settlement satisfactory to yourself, the only recourse is to bring suit through the courts.

SELL BROOKLINE HOUSES

William E. [illegible] & Co. have sold for William L. Roberts the two brick dwellings located at Nos. 80 and 82 Harvard avenue, Brookline, the purchaser being Mrs. Carrie I. Kellogg of Brookline. The properties are assessed on a total valuation of $18,000, of which $3,000 were on the 2,040 square feet of land.

BIG GAINS LAST YEAR IN BUILDING

Building Reports Show Substantial Gains in Boston and, to a Lesser Extent, in New England

[illegible] compilation of statistics of building operations last year in Boston and New England disclose substantial gains over 1914.

Building in Boston increased at the rate of 37 per cent over the preceding year [illegible] New England [illegible]

In Boston 2,384 permits were issued by the Building Department for new buildings of all types of construction, compared to 1734 issued in 1914. This is an increase of 650 permits. In other words 650 more buildings were erected last year than the previous year.

Precisely how much more was expended for new buildings last year than the previous year is impossible to determine accurately, as the estimated cost of buildings are not tabulated in Boston as in other cities. But, inasmuch as the gain last year was chiefly in first and second class structures—that is, structures either completely fireproof or having exteriors built of fireproof materials—and since this type of structure costs more to build than frame houses, it is safe to conclude that the rate of increase measured in dollars and cents was at least equal to the percentage of increase of permits. In other words it is probable that the amount expended for new structures was at least 37 per cent. greater than in 1914.

73% GAIN IN BRICK BUILDING.

Analysis of the building department records show that of the 2,384 permits issued, 1,511 authorized the construction of third-class (frame) buildings and 873 first and second-class (brick) buildings. In 1914, 1,261 permits for third-class and 503 permits for first and second-class buildings were issued. This is a gain of 250 permits for third-class and 370 for first and second-class structures. Stated in terms of percentage, brick building increased at the enormous rate of seventy-three per cent. and wooden construction at the rate of twenty-three per cent.

The greatest gains in brick construction were in Allston and Brighton, where apartment house builders continued the activity which has been characteristic of this district for the last five years. On Commonwealth avenue and Brighton avenue and streets leading into these thoroughfares, scores of big apartment houses were built during the course of the year.

Ward 20 was second to Allston and Brighton in apartment house construction. In Ward 11 builders were also active—apartment house construction leading in the Fenway and the erection of automobile warehouses on Beacon street, Commonwealth and Brookline avenues.

Ward 23, which comprises West Roxbury and Roslindale, led in the construction of frame houses. Wards 20 and 24, which in previous years have showed the way in the erection of frame structures fell behind the West Roxbury ward.

Perhaps the main cause of the increase in building activity last year was the favorable conditions of the mortgage market. The comparative ease with which construction mortgages could be procured led speculative builders to [illegible] building projects [illegible] held up since the previous Fall by adverse conditions of the money market.

MONEY MARKET IMPROVED.

In January and February the money market continued unfavorable, and consequently the number of permits taken out were affected. But as the money market improved building increased. Every month also, with the sole exception of July, showed substantial increases over the same month of the previous year.

The extraordinary increases in brick building is largely attributed to the operation of the law, widening the limits within which only houses with non-inflammible exteriors may be erected. The widened first limits, reducing the area in which frame houses could be built, meant the erection of more brick houses.

Another factor which accounts for the large gain in the number of permits for first and second-class structures was the increase in the number of private garages erected. The tendency for auto owners to build private garages—which must be fireproof throughout—is becoming more pronounced each year.

The following is a comparison by months of permits issued during the last two years by the Boston Building Department:

Mystery of Kearns' Disappearance Baffles All the Friends of Waltham's Former Mayor Defeat for Re-Election Thought to Have Affected the Mind of Former Mayor Kearns.

gone back on him; that he had been knifed by those who should have been his most stalwart supporters. He grew moody and somewhat morose, some say, and his habit of passing his friends upon the street without speaking to them, or with no more than a "howdy," which some have described as a "grunt," became more pronounced than ever.

Never before in its history has the Watch City, ten miles out from Boston and handy to every part of Middlesex and Suffolk counties, with their 1,500,000 people, had a sensation to compare with the "Kearns case."

Mr. Kearns was last seen late in the afternoon of Thursday, December 30. His successor was to take up the reins of office four days later.

No Waltham newspaper printed a word about the Mayor's departure until last Monday, the day set for the inauguration of Mayor Williams. Then, when the news was given out, the papers also announced that Artemus Rogers, Mr. Kearns' brother-in-law, was found dead the night before at his home in Hammond street.

The report of Rogers' death produced a sensation almost equal to that of the Mayor's disappearance. Rogers is described as a ne'er-do-well. He had not been living with his wife. Mayor Kearns is a bachelor, forty-four years old, and Mrs. Rogers kept house for the Mayor and his aged father.

The certificate in the Rogers case, made out by Medical Examiner George L. West, M. D., ascribed the death to "natural causes." Rogers' ailment was that which is commonly called "heart disease." He was found dead in a kitchen chair.

SISTER PROSTRATED.

The double blow of her brother's disappearance and the sudden death of the husband from whom she was living apart proved too much for Mrs. Margaret Kearns Rogers, and on Thursday she was removed from the Kearns home, at No. 96 Bacon street, to a cot in the Waltham Hospital. Friends of the family call Mrs. Rogers' trouble nervous prostration. Her condition is said to be critical.

Two weeks ago men would probably have said that a mystery like the Kearns case was impossible in a community so thickly settled as this in these days of telephone, telegraph, photograph, newspapers, and trolley [illegible] trains. And the central figure of the mystery the Mayor of a city famous the wide world over!

Every newspaper in Greater Boston, and many throughout the East, have now published pictures of the missing Mayor. Why hasn't he been found?

This question was offered by the Sunday AMERICAN last night to one of the most distinguished citizens of Waltham, a man who has known the Mayor since the days when everybody in Waltham called him "Tommy." This man's answer to the question is of great importance to those who are engaged in the search [illegible] Thomas F. Kearns.

"If 'Tom' Kearns is still alive," said his friend, "and if he is wandering about half dazed, the chances are something like one thousand to one that by this time he looks as much like a tramp as 'Hap' Ward used to look in his 'Percy and Harold' days.

"At his very best, and dressed his best, on occasions of state, 'Tom' was as fine a looking gentleman as ever you laid an eye upon. Let him go unshaven for a day or two, however, and dress him in an old suit, such as he wore when he went away, and if he told anybody he was the Mayor of Waltham they would call in the police."

KEPT GRIEF TO SELF.

It is known that Mr. Kearns was ill with the grippe when he went away. The few who were close to him—for he was not the man to encourage genuine intimacy—know also that within a comparatively short period he had had a lot of trouble.

Early in the past year the Mayor's brother, Patrick Kearns, Jr., had to be sent away to a sanitarium.

The Mayor was paying attention to Miss Julia Buckley, one of Waltham's most estimable young women. One of Miss Buckley's brothers, Timothy F. Buckley, proprietor of the Riverside Hotel in Waltham and the Hotel Albany in Brighton, was similarly attacked during the year and passed away.

The case of the Mayor's brother, and the sad death of Miss Buckley's brother, must have distressed Mr. Kearns; but, as has been indicated, the Mayor was a man who kept his griefs and his joys almost exclusively to himself. Men of another type would have taken consolation and encouragement from the cheerful words of friends and neighbors.

While there is no evidence that the Mayor was in want, or near want, it is known that his worldly circumstances were, to say the least, modest. He lived with his father and a sister in a rented house.

Having had to fight for every round, as he climbed the ladder of life he found himself at forty-four barely making a beginning in a profession which more favored young men enter in the early twenties. For four years the Mayor had held public office. His salary as Mayor, however, was only $1,800. He had things to worry about, this Mayor who has gone away, and, being the man he was, he could not talk them away or laugh them away with the friends who would have been only too glad to help him if only he would let them.

Then came the December election, and defeat.

Everybody in Waltham says "Tom" Kearns was the soul of honesty. Waltham would have trusted him with anything. He fully expected to be re-elected for a third term.

His defeat is said to have been due in large part to the dissatisfaction of Democrats with his course in office. The Mayor was big, liberal, broad-minded. He recognized the fact that Waltham is at heart [illegible] community. His predecessor, Mayor Patrick J. Duane, had "played the game," as politicians phrase it, had worked for the Democratic organization, had nominated Democrats for office and had nominated them over and over again.

Mr. Kearns was not so stalwart. He looked about him at a Republican city government, did what he thought best under the circumstances, and was at no time "offensively partisan." On election day, some Republicans voted for him. Many Democrats voted against him. He felt that he had been knifed. His pride was hurt. He felt friendless, alone. And he was ill.

Yesterday, however, in Waltham, life-long friends recalled that once before Mr. Kearns went under circumstances quite similar. He came back, they pointed out, and he made good. It was plain to be seen that the thought was consoling, and that these friends feel certain that the book of "Tom" Kearns's life is far from closed.

"Tom" Kearns was born in Waltham, forty-four years ago, the son of Patrick Kearns. A day or two ago the Mayor's venerable father was still to be seen working on the streets of Waltham, a city laborer. A sympathizer stepped up to the old gentleman and shook him by the hand. "Wouldn't the city give you these troublous days at home?" he was asked.

"I guess they would," said the old gentleman, "but you know how it is. I am happier at work. The work takes my mind off things."

Young Kearns entered the employ of the American Watch Company, Waltham's great industry, and, when he was twenty-one, in 1893—the "panic" year of the second Cleveland administration—was one of the hundreds who went in what Waltham still remembers as the "Big Discharge."

FAILS TO PASS.

After that the young man worked for a time with E. Howard, later the United States Watch Company, and eventually found employment in Boston as a stagehand at the Park Theatre. It was here, his friends say, that he learned to declaim. He became a public speaker.

His friends recall the hit he made when he was suddenly called upon at an entertainment to fill the gap caused by the failure of certain talent to appear. Kearns made the hit of the night. Ever after that he was in general demand.

Up to the last, indeed, the Mayor exhibited his talent for public speaking. He was always ready to respond. Some of his favorites were Kipling's "If," Locke's "Dawn on the Coast of Ireland," and Thayer's "Casey at the Bat."

From the Park Theatre Kearns went to the establishment of Donnelley, the Boston bill poster. It was while posting bills that he determined to become a lawyer. He enrolled in the Y. M. C. A. evening law school, and in January, 1902, having been graduated, felt ready for the bar examination.

His failure to pass on his first try is said to have affected him much as his recent defeat at the polls is believed to have affected him. He broke down. Friends and relatives feared for him. But he came back—as so many of his friends believed, and all hope, he will now come back—and in the following July, 1902, was admitted to the bar.

For ten years he was chairman of the Democratic City Committee. For a term of two years he represented Ward 1—a strongly Republican ward, it is proper to say—in the Board of Aldermen. Twice he was named by Mayor Duane as City Solicitor. Then, for two years, he was Mayor.

Mr. Kearns' law office is in the Central Block, directly across the way from Waltham's wooden and antique City Hall. It was here that he called on his last day down town to turn over his final mayoralty pay envelope unopened to Miss Philbrick, his clerk. He is also said to have left with Miss Philbrick two bank checks signed in blank. His sister, Mrs. Rogers, found money that he had left at home on the kitchen table.

URGED TO GO HOME.

The missing Mayor never tasted liquor. He never smoked tobacco. He was never heard to utter an improper word or to tell a "smoking room" story. In his youth a wonderfully fast ball player, he was a man of splendid physique. His friends, recalling these things, [illegible] possible that such a man could have gone to his death in the ice cold waters of Silver Lake or the Charles River.

Early in the week of his disappearance the Mayor was found in his office at City Hall by Dr. McManama, the city physician. Everybody remarked that His Honor looked far from well. Dr. McManama insisted on taking his temperature. It was 104 and the physician ordered the Mayor home and to bed.

Mr. Kearns remained indoors only a day and a half. On Thursday he came out, to go—where?

He had been variously reported in the Nonantum section of Newton; near a barn on the shore of Silver Lake; and, later on the same day, back in Waltham. One man says he saw him near the North Station in Boston last Friday night. One "Kearns," suffering some temporary aberration, was located in the City Hospital, Boston. He was not the missing Mayor.

Chief McKenna of Waltham and his men have not dropped their task since first it came to them, a few days after the Mayor was lost. The police have also sent photographs and circulars to every police department in the East. The Knights of Columbus and the Elks have in like manner circularized all the lodges in the United States and Canada.

"But he is dead," says part of Waltham, "and his body will be found in [illegible]."

"[illegible]," the other part of Waltham insists, "and he'll come back and make good, just as he did before."

In either event, that has happened which men would have called "impossible." Dead or alive, the Mayor of a famous New England city has been lost for ten days.

MISS BUTLER LEFT PET DOG TO MAID

Miss Mary S. Butler's will, filed in the Suffolk Probate Court, provides that her pet dog, "Ras," be given her maid, Mrs. Margart Mason, if the animal be alive at her death, and if Mrs. Mason be not living the dog be "humanly killed."

It was learned from Attorney Edward W. Bancroft that while Mrs. Mason is alive she will receive a bequest of $300. "Ras" died several years ago. Miss Butler left several bequests to Chelsea societies and $10,000 to her nephew, Aubrey B. Butler.

STATE BOARD ASKS GAS LEGISLATION

Legislation to authorize it to establish a definite standard for gas supplied by both privately and publicly owned corporations was requested yesterday by the State Board of Gas and Electric Light Commissioners in its annual report to the Legislature. The Commission also asked for power to compel every company distributing 15,000,000 cubic feet of gas a year to establish a suitable room equipped with a calorimeter.

BENT, OLD-TIME HORSEMAN, DEAD

Russell S. Bent, a well-known old-time horseman, is dead at the Leonard Morse Hospital in Natick in his eightieth year, of pneumonia. For many years he was a shoe manufacturer. Later he became a partner in the restaurant business of Woodbury, Bent & Hall in Devonshire street, Boston. In the 80s Mr. Bent owned and raced Alcyphron, a famous stallion, for which he was once offered $10,000, it is said.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOL BURNED IN HOLYOKE

Holyoke, Jan. 8.—In one of the most spectacular fires Holyoke has seen in years, the Immaculate Conception parochial school was destroyed by fire, shortly after 9 a. m. today. The building was unoccupied, there being no school on Saturday. Several firemen had narrow escapes, but none was seriously injured. At the height of the fire the cupola fell. The loss is estimated at $30,0000. The cause of the fire is unknown.

CAPTURED MAIL TELLS BRITISH PLAN IN GREECE

Letters from Athens Diplomats Show Small Regard for a Neutral Nation.

[illegible] is of the greatest importance [illegible] the safety of the [illegible] troops.

2. France [illegible] as, for instance, the right to visit ships and boats in territorial waters and to search out and destroy hostile submarines and their bases on the coast and in territorial waters.

In consideration of the difficult position in which the withdrawal of the Serbian army towards Albania and Montenegro will bring the troops of the Allies, it is of the greatest necessity that this wish be granted, not only verbally, but also by action, that is, by evacuation of the vicinity of Salonica by the Greek troops, which must be withdrawn in order not to hinder our movements for our protection.

Following is an extract from the captured letter of an English official, dated Salonica, Nov. 25, 1915:

It is in keeping with the sentimental English [illegible] to speak as if Bulgaria had attacked Serbia from behind. The [illegible] that Bulgarian mobilization was made necessary by the fact that these Serbian divisions were concentrated on the Bulgarian frontier.

WARNING TO SERBIA.

We told Serbia explicitly what would happen if she did not give in. Now we see what we predicted in Sofia. Therefore we have little sympathy for Serbia, but more on the other side for Bulgaria, who has again to spill her blood in order to retain what she had already won in the bloody war of 1912.

However that may be, we must for the present put our sympathy in our pockets. The policy of the Allies will be justified by success. If we succeed in driving the Bulgarians out of Macedonia, might will have conquered.

Certainly it was not right that we did not keep Bulgaria neutral. We could have accomplished this by strong action in Nish, and in order to keep this neutrality we could have paid a high price. As matters are now, we seem to have destroyed one Balkan state after another.

You appear to think that Greece will intervene on our side. I doubt that very much. I would not be surprised should the contrary take place. If in future I come home, I will explain this all to you.

If you knew the kind of people who are acting as newspaper correspondents, and if you knew how monumental is their ignorance, you would place no confidence in the newspapers.

The following is from a letter from W. Y. C. ——, employed as a secretary in the English Embassy in Athens:

WOULD DEPOSE KING.

Athens, 28 November, 1915.

According to my opinion, it is best to depose the King and make Venizelos president of the Hellenic republic, but everybody seems afraid of such drastic means. Unfortunately the King is very popular with most of the army.

From a letter from Mr. R—— connected with the British admiralty:

Athens, 3d Dec., 1915

I am convinced that the people and the King is so obstinate, he remains unmovable. It is my conviction that after this war there will be no more kings. They alone have caused our misery.

From a letter by Mr. W. Y. C——, Secretary in the English embassy at Athens:

Athens, 3d Dec., 1915.

I hope that they will soon decide at home whether or not to continue the Salonica expedition. The Greeks are trying by every means to persuade us to give up the expedition. My opinion is it is very important that we take a safe position here and defend Salonica during the Winter; then, if no great expedition is thought out, this will tie up a hostile force and prevent their being withdrawn to another field of battle.

The Greeks fear the Germans too much to attempt the protection of their country. They say they will remain onlookers and will admit the enemy if we insist on remaining here. They are most miserable, as one can imagine. All we have to do is to make them fear us more than they fear the Germans. For this purpose we have a strong fleet which is waiting and ready in case of emergency to make a demonstration.

LET OURSELVES DRIFT.

From a letter of W. T. H. —— to G. H. F. —— at the Foreign Office in London:

I assume that you have returned to London and wish you would grant yourself a little rest, but fear that in these unquiet times this would be difficult. I hope they are more inclined to listen to your opinion than formerly.

The people at home seem to have changed their course and they seem less inclined to trust the government than they were. The people want to know why we arrange matters as we do and why we have spent so much money to accomplish so little.

The happenings here are a good example of our policy. As usual we have let ourselves drift and have been taken by surprise.

Originally we wished to land a few divisions as a political play to impress the Greeks and Bulgarians. We failed miserably, and now we have to land strong forces and more are still to follow. The end is not in sight.

We are playing into German hands by voluntarily calling against us 300,000 or 400,000 Bulgarians, while if we had withdrawn tamely and let the Bulgarians into Macedonia, we would probably not have been in the position of having to fight them.

I enclose a memorandum on the situation which was submitted to the military officials as coming from a foreign diplomat. If it had come directly from me, it would have gone into the waste paper basket. In this way it made an impression.

SITUATION CRITICAL.

I think the Dardanelles [illegible] should, if possible, be given up. It is time to close our eyes of failures instead of going ahead blindly only because we have begun an affair and have not the moral courage to withdraw. The Greeks certainly deserve nothing but good.

From a letter to Major R. S. S. R[illegible], London, from a friend in Athens dated November 30, 1915:

The situation here must be described as an entirely unusual and critical one. I think we will bring the matter to a favorable close if our government takes a firm stand, but the latter is so wavery that if things turn against us, it will be their fault. You see the situation is, for us especially, critical and disturbing from a political and military standpoint.

Many believe our days are numbered. Personally I don't believe it, but I confess the position of our 150,000 men in Salonica seems very dangerous. Will they have time to prepare against the Germans who will storm in as soon as Monastir has fallen?

From a letter by Y. E., member of the British embassy in Athens to A. Y., an official in the Foreign Office in London:

FRIGHTFUL CONFUSION.

Athens, Dec. 1, 1915

We are in frightful confusion here and it is possible we may spend Christmas in England, having accomplished an improbable break between Greece and France and England. It will be very disagreeable if we have to go, as we cannot make even the smallest preparations.

I don't think it will come to that, but, nevertheless, unpleasant days are before us ere we accomplish what we want, namely, a free hand in Salonica and Greek Macedonia, to proceed as if we were in our own or in a hostile country without the native troops hindering us in these districts.

MARSTERS HEADS RAILROAD AGENTS

Boston Man Unanimous Choice at Annual Meeting; Banquet at Young's Hotel.

At the annual meeting and banquet of the railroad and steamboat agents of Boston, in Young's Hotel yesterday, George E. Marsters, passenger agent in New England for the Rutland Railroad, Central Railroad of New Jersey, Philadelphia & Reading Railway and Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway, was unanimously elected president.

Mr. Marsters is head of the George E. Marsters Tourist Agency at No. 248 Washington street, Boston, and has been many years in the railroad [illegible] here. A banquet was served at 6:30 p. m., and entertainment was furnished by the Boston Quintette Club and Daggett's Orchestra.

The guests and speakers were Lieutenant Governor Calvin Coolidge, Louis K. Liggett, president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce; James H. Hustis, president of the Boston & Maine Railroad, and Postmaster William F. Murray. Practically all the [illegible] steamboat and railroad agents of New England attended, and there were guests from New York and other points.

JOHN W. BALLOU, 35 TIMES SHERIFF, DIES

Bath, Me., Jan. 8.—John W. Ballou, a former sheriff of Sagadahoc County and twice the head of the Grand Commandery of Maine, Knights Templar, died at the age of eighty-three. Until April, 1913, Mr. Ballou had been sheriff for thirty-five consecutive years. He was born in Newton, Mass.

MANY ENTRIES FOR HUB POULRY SHOW

While most of the shows throughout the country are falling off in entries 20 per cent. or more, the big Boston poultry show will total about 700 more than last year and over 8,000 specimens will be penned in the Mechanics Building January 11 to 15.

Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes, Rhode Island Reds, Orpingtons and Leghorns are coming strong. There will be the greatest display of Hamburgs ever seen. The waterfowl exhibit will be far beyond any previously seen here, geese alone numbering over 200 specimens. The entry of bantams is far beyond that of a year ago, and there will be over 2,500 pigeons on exhibition.

The educational feature will embrace an interesting and instructive exhibit from the Massachusetts Agricultural College, showing the old chicken house of back farm days in contrast to the model house used successfully at the college poultry farm. Live fowls from the college will be shown, and one can study the different types and the ones with high and low vitality, others that give strong hatchable eggs and some that have never produced a chick.

WAR AIDS WINTER RESORTS IN SOUTH

The war in Europe seems to have a decidedly beneficial effect on the Winter resorts in this country. Reports from all of the resorts in Georgia and Florida are to the effect that their advance bookings this season greatly exceed those of this time last year. A great many more people from Boston and other points in Massachusetts, in fact all over New England, have either already gone or are planning to go to that section. The direct steamer route from Boston is more popular this year than ever before with these people, and the steamship City of Atlanta scheduled to sail from Boston on the Savannah line January 15 and 2[illegible] has already booked a number of prominent families from all sections of New England, who have been accustomed to sailing from New York.

TREND OF TRAVEL TURNS TO SOUTH

Now that Winter is here, the trend of travel turns South, especially to the many popular Florida and Southern resorts. Colpitts Ticket & Tourist Agency, No. 333 Washington street and No. 146 Canal street, have arranged a number of attractive trips, one of the features this year being special all-rail, one-way parties every ten days.

JEWISH CONGRESS TO MARK EPOCH

All Organizations Unite Here Next Sunday to Discuss Problems Arising from the War.

The Jewish Congress Conference will meet next Sunday afternoon in Kingsley Hall, Ford building. This will be the first time in the history of the Jewish community in Boston that every Jewish Orthodox or Reformed Congregation and radical organizations, as well as lodges, Zionist societies, educational organizations, charitable and benefit societies meet in council to discuss the Jewish problems arising from the war.

A local Jewish congress committee will be organized to work in conjunction with the Jewish National Congress organizations.

The purpose of the congress is to unite the Jews of this country in order to obtain national, political and religious liberties for the Jews of the belligerent lands.

The temporary congress committee of Boston consists of Rabbi M. M. Eichler, chairman; Julius Meyer, secretary; Louis E. Kirstein, Jacob de Haas, Leo J. Lyons, Edward J. Bromberg and Isaac Harris. The call to the meeting was signed by the following:

Louis D. Brandeis, S. Cooper, Lazarus Davis, Albert Hurwitz, Abraham S. Kubitsky, Henry H. Levenson, Joseph Levenson, Mark Lewis, N. Pinanski, Ph. Shaffer, Joheph Sonnabend, D. Stern, Joseph Strauss, Max Ulin, Rabbi M. M. Eichler, Julius Meyer.

Rabbi Eichler of Temple Ohabei Sholom will deliver the opening address. Louis D. Brandeis will be the chief speaker.

COPPER STRONG IN DOMESTIC CONSUMPTION

No Falling Off in Foreign Requirements; Many New Phases in Market.

At the end of the week there was [illegible] new in the copper metal situation. All leading producers were asking 24 cents a pound for electrolytic and little is said to be available for immediate delivery. Inquiries denote no diminution in the demand for domestic consumption, while foreign requirements do not appear to lessen. Sales have been made for delivery late in 1916. Altogether the metal market has many phases that are without precedent.

Copper has been sold in London at $116 a ton by American interests regardless of London Metal Exchange quotations. This is at the rate of about 24 cents a pound, before deducting freight charges, at the present exchange rates. The British government has fixed £[illegible] a ton as the official price for refined copper and restricted dealings to fifty-ton lots. This is equivalent to about 21 cents a pound. In explanation of this a local financial publication has received the following cablegram from its London correspondent:

> There has been official dissatisfaction at high prices [illegible] lead and spelter [illegible] prices affect consumption for general industrial purposes.

SPELTER CONSUMPTION.

Regarding the metal [illegible] which is pronounced [illegible] Hayden, Stone & Co. say in their latest market letter:

The metal situation is certainly as strong as one could ask for. It is estimated by one competent authority that the production of spelter in 1915 was 492,000 tons, which compares with 360,000 tons in 1914, and an average for the last three years of about 3[illegible] tons. In spite of this great increase [illegible] production, however, stocks on hand at the end of the year are placed at but 14,3[illegible] tons, which compares with 23,500 at the close of 1914, and 40,000 tons at the close of 1913. The amount on hand at the end of last year was equivalent to only three days' production.

ENGLAND PREPARES FOR 1916 WAR COST

London, Jan. 8.—If the war lasts a year longer British financial experts believe it will cost Great Britain about $10,000,000,000 for 1916. The most important British financial operation of the war will become necessary probably in the next few months, when a big public loan will be issued. Unless the situation greatly improves, this will have to be a five per cent. loan.

The Government is pledged to permit conversion of the existing 4½ per cent. loan into the next loan. The existing issue totals about [illegible] sterling ($4,500,000,000), so an additional half per cent would mean 4,500,000 pounds additional annual interest. It is therefore obvious the government will postpone the issue as long as possible.

FORCED TO BID UP IN WHEAT MARKET

By JOSEPH E. PRITCHARD.

Chicago, Jan. 8.—Some of the more shorts in the wheat market [illegible] becoming [illegible] proper [illegible] over at least a [illegible] outstanding contracts [illegible] but they were forced to [illegible] the price [illegible] order to se[illegible] very little wheat when the big [illegible] is considered.

[illegible] in this grain may possibly [illegible] to a lower level, but [illegible] sharp reaction [illegible] advance is probable.

The average bear in wheat points with considerable certainty to the big amount in the visible supply. He also refers to the fact that foreigners are not taking as much wheat as formerly, and on these conditions he continues to put out short lines.

He fails to consider the fact that there are few cars in which to transport wheat from the Western country to the seaboard, and he also forgets the great scarcity of available vessel room for the carrying of this grain.

There were large orders here at Chicago today for both wheat and oats that could not be filled because of the uncertainty in securing cars for taking it to seaboard ports. Those on the bull side of wheat feel confident of their position, and the same may be said of those who are bears and big shorts.

The movement of wheat off farms and out of country elevators in both great belts was smaller this week and there is a promise of a further decrease in the movement.

Western receipts totalled 1[illegible] bushels in round numbers compared with [illegible] bushels the previous week and [illegible] bushels for a like period last year. Corn ruled strong most of the day and closed at gains of [illegible]

Seaboard exporters were in the market and stood ready to make large purchases of corn, but being unable to secure cars with which to make shipments the sales were only 75,000 bushels.

The buying of corn was of good character and the selling was mainly by those having profits.

SUSTAIN AWARD OF $15,000 AGAINST "L"

By a decision of the Supreme Court handed down yesterday, John Vahey of Watertown retains possession of $15,000 awarded him by the Middlesex Superior Court in a suit against the Elevated Railroad. Vahey alleged that while returning from Boston on a Beacon street car he was thrown to the street when the car went over a switch. The Elevated took exceptions in the lower court [illegible] and it was taken to the Supreme Court.

CHAMPION COPPER

Among the most active stocks on the Boston Curb. The ore now being handled runs nearly 20% copper; it is phenomenally good. It is the best low-priced copper stock on the market. It is selling at about 30 cents a share. The property is free from debt, substantially equipped, and fully financed. Contracts for new power drills and other equipment recently given will hasten production. You can buy this little copper stock with confidence. There is practically no risk at the present price.

P. S.—Copper metal is 24 cents. This very high price means enormous earnings for coppers. All good coppers will sell very much higher before Spring. Buy them now. Buy Anaconda, Copper Range, Quincy, Tamarack, Utah-Apex, Consolidated Arizona, Mason Valley, Trinity, First National and——Bay State Gas.

We may have something interesting to say on Humboldt next week if the deal now being negotiated for a Tungsten property goes through. Do not buy it yet.

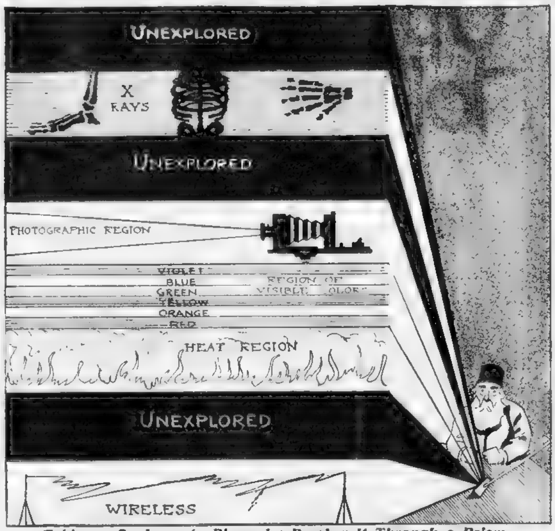
How Science Is PUTTING THE SUNBEAM TO WORK

TAKING RAYS OF LIGHT TO PIECES to See If They Cannot Be Made Even MORE USEFUL TO MANKIND



Taking a Sunbeam to Pieces by Passing It Through a Prism.

This Diagram Shows What the Sunbeam Is Already Doing for Us. Three Regions of Its Activities Are Still Unexplored, But Science Expects That Some Day They May Be Made As Useful to Mankind as Those Which Now Give Us Heat, Colors, Wireless Telegraphy, X-Ray and Photography.

T[illegible] which an [illegible] under military [illegible] claimed, that the [illegible] on board of a [illegible] distance of miles. [illegible] when it is explained [illegible] part of the sunbeam [illegible] that carry "wireless" [illegible]

[illegible] very few years has it come to [illegible] the every day sunbeam is vastly more [illegible] supposed. It is a bundle [illegible] kinds of things, and, in [illegible] heat it carries electricity, and [illegible]

[illegible] part of it when suitably employed may [illegible] become the most formidable of all instruments of warfare. It is by no means inconceivable that its development as such may arrive before the [illegible] of the great conflict that is now going on in Europe.

More than one idea formed in the imagination of ingenious fiction writers has been translated into accomplished fact during the present war—notably the [illegible] poisonous gas-clouds and [illegible] Doyle's suggestion of a submarine blockade to destroy England's commerce. It was H. G. Wells who described the [illegible]tiful destructive power of a "heat ray" employed [illegible] invading foes from Mars, which annihilated every [illegible]ng thing against which it was directed.

Science has been taking the sunbeam to pieces, as a child does with a toy, to find out what it is made of. Thus we have been made aware that only a very small part of it carries light—which means, of course, that only a relative few of its rays are able to affect the retina of the eyes. Another part, much larger, carries heat, and upon this the farmer depends mainly for the growing of his crops.

When Roentgen, by a lucky accident, discovered the X-ray, it was an invisible piece of the sunbeam that he hit upon and utilized. Another portion is composed of electric rays, which are used for transmitting wireless messages.

It appears, then, that we are putting the sunbeam to work and obliging it to do things which used not to be regarded as in any way its business. Young Mr Hammond is actually employing it (the wireless part of it that is to say) to steer a new fangled submarine torpedo, which, when his invention is perfected, will be controllable from shore at a distance of many miles by merely viewing it with a telescope and pushing a couple of buttons to turn the rudder this way and that.

How, one might ask, is it possible to take a sunbeam to pieces and find out what it is made of? To take it to pieces is the simplest thing in the world; any child can do it with the help of a glass prism.

The child finds the experiment amusing, for the sunbeam coming in at a window [illegible] through the prism upon a wall [illegible] up into a series of color bands with violet at one end [illegible] the other.

But, quite naturally, it never occurs to the child [illegible] nor did it so occur to that [illegible] philosopher until recently [illegible] the color bands [illegible] a very small part of the sunbeam thus taken to pieces [illegible] prism. The child's eye cannot perceive the bands of invisible rays which extend far above the violet strip at one end of the [illegible] and far below the red strip at the other end.

This is where always-inquisitive science has taken up the problem. The question [illegible] is, What are the rays above the violet and below the red? What is their nature and for what purpose can [illegible] be utilized?

To a considerable extent this problem has already been solved. We know that above the violet band are most of the rays that affect the photographic plate; they are chemical rays, which is the reason why. Below the red band are nearly all of the heat rays of the sunbeam.

Below the heat region are the electric rays, used to carry wireless messages. Above the "ultra-violet" part, that enables the every-day photographer to take his pictures, is a region in which photographs can still be taken (all other rays being excluded), but only in a vacuum.

Far above the latter region is the home of the mysterious X-rays, to which human flesh is transparent. With their help "shadowgraphs" can be made, showing the bones of the skeleton or a bullet embedded in a bone. During the present war the X rays have saved the lives of thousands of wounded men.

Most interesting of all, however, from our present point of view, are the regions of the sunbeam (thus split up) which remain as yet unexplored. There is such a region below the heat band, separating the latter from the home of the electric rays beneath. There is another beyond the vacuum-photographic, and before the X-rays are reached. There is yet another beyond the X rays.

Who can say what unsuspected marvels lie in these unknown regions of invisible light, or to what purposes may be applied the unidentified rays [illegible] contain? They may revolutionize [illegible]; they may even be destined to control the march of future civilization.

CANNIBALS NOT SO BAD as We Have Always Thought

THE cannibal is not necessarily, as is often thought, a ferocious individual, blood tainted tiger, a murderous monomaniac.

Whatever one may say, there is nothing in common between the negro man-eater and our own criminal degenerate. The degenerate of civilization is a monstrosity, a being outside Nature's pale. One fears for one's life in quarters frequented by such degenerates, while one is safe among cannibals, unless one is at war with them.

There is no comparison to be made between these two types, one placed at the birth of society, the other at its decline. The second belongs to social pathology; the first is a healthy, normal product.

Cannibalism is not an instinct, but a custom. Jesting apart, it depends upon a peculiar conception, which is doubtless barbarous and savage, of one's relationship with the stranger and the slave. This in no wise hinders one who indulges in it from being in everyday life a gentle, merry, playful individual with whom intercourse is pleasing, at least for his friends.

Do not look for conscious wickedness in the cannibal, nor for depravity. Outside the tribe, and in a more restricted sense outside the family, he recognizes no humanity, or, as we should say, no "kindred." Every other man is a "barbarian" in the ancient sense of the word, and as such is an abject and contemptible being, of strange and ridiculous manners and customs, with whom treaties are made when necessity compels, but who is hunted and ferreted out when possible and who is eaten like butcher's meat.

"In spite of the denials of certain persons," says Adolphi Louis Curban, the famous African explorer, "I have often had proof and have personally ascertained that some tribes take prisoners of war or buy slaves in order to keep them in reserve, and afterwards to slaughter them and eat them according to their needs. The appointed victims enjoy comparative freedom while awaiting their end, and are denied none of the delights which render the negro's life attractive, such as idleness, good food, a soft bed, and so on.

"The captain of a French steamer, who had put in at one of these villages in order to buy provisions and wood, recognized, in the crowd which came running down to the river bank, a man who was a stranger to that district, and who had lately served as steersman on his boat. When questioned as to what he was doing there, the man replied that he was a captive in the village, and [illegible] such was destined some day or other to fill the cooking-pot of the masters. The captain [illegible] offered to carry him off.

"It would have been an easy matter, for the man would only have had to leap to the [illegible] while the crew overawed the villagers with their guns, and the boat would then have steamed off at full speed. He refused, because at the time he was enjoying all the luxuries of life, and the prospect of the knife had consequently no power to disturb him. The boat left without him."

Wine That Even BILLY SUNDAY MAY DRINK

WINE that Billy Sunday, William Jennings Bryan, [illegible] temperance advocate, may drink without the slightest danger of [illegible] his pledge at last seems to be an assured fact.

Ever since mankind began to like things besides water [illegible] science has been trying to concoct [illegible] other beverages that would taste [illegible] the "real thing" but that would [illegible] proved a [illegible] matter. [illegible] produced were not enough [illegible] to deceive [illegible] an [illegible]. [illegible] the sparkling tang, the delicate [illegible] the fragrant aroma which make alcoholic beverages pleasing to so many men and women entirely apart from their intoxicating qualities.

Italian scientists have lately succeeded in producing a de-alcoholized wine that is guaranteed to deceive any connoisseur. It contains all the ethers and aldehydes, the tannic acid and other chemical elements that give wine its peculiar taste and color. But there is not a drop of alcohol in it, and you may drink it from morning to night without fear of intoxication.

The de-alcoholization is accomplished in two ways. One is by distilling ordinary wine over and over again under relatively low pressure. The other is by blowing through the wine, at a temperature lower than that of the human body, the waste gas produced during fermentation.

Both these methods leave the wine unaltered in every respect, except for the removal of its alcohol. And alcohol will not form again, no matter how long the wine is kept.

The efforts now being made to manufacture this non-intoxicating wine on a large scale are attracting the greatest interest among physicians and temperance advocates. Hundreds of thousands of moderate and convivial drinkers can, it is believed, be saved from the evil effects of alcohol by offering them a really agreeable substitute for alcoholic drinks such as this new Italian wine is said to be.

The BEETLE LIKES TOBACCO

WHEN [illegible] up one of [illegible] brands of [illegible] cigarettes and [illegible] draw well, very [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] expensive one [illegible] the tobacco trade has. It eats numerous things such as rhubarb, ginger, cayenne pepper, yeast cakes, rice and figs, but its favorite food is dried tobacco. Although often called the "cigarette beetle," this is really a misnomer, for it attacks not only cigarettes but all kinds of dried tobacco—snuff, plug [illegible] leaf [illegible] and cigars.

[illegible] of the nicotine and other [illegible] tobacco [illegible] to contain, the tobacco beetle makes it his favorite [illegible] and apparently suffers no ill effects. Either he is immune [illegible] in tobacco or Nature has equipped him with the means of neutralizing it.

[illegible] is the surest means of keeping the beetles out of tobacco. Storage rooms should be kept free from trash and tobacco refuse, and all doors and windows should be screened.

Once the beetles have obtained a foothold in a stock of tobacco the surest method of getting rid of them is by fumigation with carbon bisulphid or hydrocyanic [illegible].

LIFE SAVING Facts About GREAT WHITE PLAGUE

HERE are some facts [illegible] tuberculosis and the [illegible] of its approach which may save your life. The more you are guided by these facts, the less liable you are to die a victim to the Great White Plague. Read these paragraphs carefully, then cut them out and save them for future reference.

Your chances for recovery depend upon an early diagnosis. The later in its course the disease is found the less chance there is for recovery.

A hemorrhage from the lungs means tuberculosis without exception.

A subnormal temperature (by the thermometer) in the morning and an afternoon rise of temperature means tuberculosis 99 times in 100, and the other time too, unless it can be accounted for otherwise by a doctor.

A low blood pressure, taken with a proper instrument, is suggestive of tuberculosis.

A cough that lasts more than three weeks should suggest tuberculosis, and make you seek an examination by a competent physician.

The tubercle bacillus in the sputum is a positive sign of tuberculosis, but the diagnosis should be made long before this can be found.

The accompanying diagram furnishes striking evidence of the way tuberculosis is being checked as a result of our better understanding of the disease. As the diagram shows, the tuberculosis death rate in New York, Philadelphia and Boston has declined almost continuously since the discovery by Koch in 1882 of the tubercle bacillus.

The death rate in these three cities combined has been more than cut in half since that date, or, to be exact, it has declined from 380.6 per 100,000 of population in 1882 to 164.6 in 1914. The 1914 death rate was, therefore, only 43.2 per cent of that of 1882, or, to put it the other way, the death rate of 1882 had by 1914 fallen 56.8 per cent.

A New Kind of FUEL FROM GARBAGE

MANUFACTURING [illegible] grade fuel from [illegible] is a new in[illegible] solve the problem of [illegible] the waste of towns and [illegible] experimental plant [illegible] San Antonio, Texas. It has proved [illegible] that a [illegible] plant is to be erected [illegible] Texas.

[illegible] entered into a contract [illegible] the waste [illegible] at the plant. This [illegible] than it now costs the [illegible] of its garbage.

[illegible] important feature of the new method of [illegible] waste that comes from the streets [illegible] is that it is converted into a fuel [illegible] to be equal to bituminous coal. This is accomplished in much the same manner that [illegible] bricks are made. The machinery used is practically the same as that used in making [illegible].

The [illegible] difference in the process, however, [illegible] not required to be as [illegible] bricks. The fuel bricks are dried in the sun or open air instead of in kilns. To produce this new fuel from garbage a mixture of equal quantities of coal dust and garbage, with an addition of 7 per cent of water tar from gas plants or oil refineries is used.

It takes one thousand of the fuel bricks to make a ton, says a writer in Coal Age. They are clean and dustless and are easy and convenient to handle. In San Antonio the new fuel is being used by many people in their homes. The demand for it is said to be much greater than the supply. It will not slack, no matter how long it is kept in storage; it is impervious to water and burns to ashes without leaving a semblance of clinkers; and it produces no odor and little smoke when being burned.

The remarkable spectacle of seeing old shoes, hats, paper, rags, straw, house garbage and a variety of other waste products being thrown into one machine and emerging from another in the shape of a perfect fuel brick is to be witnessed daily at the plant in operation at San Antonio. The finished product bears no resemblance to the raw material [illegible] its manufacture. The process performs the important work of sanitation, which is considered of the utmost importance in disposing of municipal garbage.

[illegible] mechanical arrangement of the garbage-fuel plant is simple. The refuse is unloaded [illegible] upon a sorting platform and then sprayed with creosote, not only as a sanitary [illegible] but to allow the sorters to work [illegible]. Through holes in the platform the garbage is dropped upon conveyors, which [illegible] the various departments of the plant.

The iron is carried into storage bins; dead animals are conveyed to the fertilizer department, bottles to the washing tank; ashes, stone and brick to a dump; tin cans to an incinerator, [illegible] removes the solder, the remaining tin [illegible] baled; and the residue of the garbage [illegible] conveyed to the fuel-manufacturing department where it is made into bricks.

The entire plant is tightly enclosed so as to [illegible] from escaping. The cost of manufacturing the fuel bricks is about $1.50 per ton. They sell in San Antonio for $6.50 per [illegible]

MORE HUSBANDS Needed in Europe

THE problem of "too many women" promises to be one of the most serious which the nations of Europe will have to face as a result of the war. Even before war began there were 2,788,373 more females than males in the population of Great Britain, France and Germany. Germany had a surplus of 845,661 and France of 645,211 women and girls compared with the number of men and boys.

Great Britain had a surplus of 1,927,501 women and girls before the war. The British losses in battle are estimated at 100,000, with 65,000 missing and 300,000 wounded. To be sure, not all the killed and missing are from the United Kingdom. Many are from Canada, Australia, New Zealand and other British possessions.

But it would be safe to say that the war has increased the majority of women and girls in the British Isles to 2,100,000, and the end is not yet. When the war is over there will be literally millions more women than men.

The Germans are estimated as having lost 700,000 killed since the beginning of the war and have 300,000 missing, many of whom, no doubt, are dead. The excess of feminine population probably has been doubled at least in the last fifteen months. There are said to be 1,000,000 Germans on the list of wounded, many of whom are crippled for life.

It is apparent, then, that the problem of finding husbands is as serious now in Germany as in London. France had a smaller surplus of women before the war and has lost fewer men than has its antagonist, but it, too, now has more than a million more women and girls than men and boys.

M. Rodin, the Sculptor, Writes On—

How a Purification of Art Will Spring from the War and a Nobler Inspiration Will Replace the Decadent Tendencies Which Have Prevailed

M. Rodin, the Great French Sculptor.

By Auguste Rodin

(Written Especially for This Newspaper by the World's Foremost Sculptor.)

BEFORE the war every tendency seemed to conspire to bring about the decadence of Europe.

European society, the elite of the children of fortune, flocked to our Paris, which past centuries had made magnificent, to expend their gold, their vices and their lasciviousness.

Paris, thanks to its own frivolous recklessness and to the foreign curiosity that it was amused to satisfy, became the international capital of all corruption.

No doubt all large centres are an attraction for this cosmopolitan crowd; but they have not all the same alluring aspect. Even persons who are most ignorant of art feel the irresistible attraction of a city adorned by the art of centuries. All capitals have not the beauties of Paris, crowned by the unique perfection of our Palais Royal.

This capital became, after the Revolution, the centre of a cosmopolitan art, foreign to our genius. Paris, which has been so cruel in our own time to its few true artists—for it martyred Carpeaux Barye and Rude—welcomed without discrimination everything that came from abroad.

Cupidity, contempt of art, reigned as masters for a hundred years. France, which, thanks to the ardor and the harmonious clarity of its genius, had always been the inexhaustible source of generous ideas and infinite [illegible] was sinking into the mire.

Our art of the middle ages, the sublime art of our cathedrals, in the sincerity of its genius, its understanding of the essential, its love of life, had attained the supreme [illegible] architecture. After that, each century added a [illegible] a new expression to the art of our race, to the manifestation, unceasingly enriched, of our genius.

Nevertheless, this genius, after the Gothic period, [illegible] little by little. It lost something of its severity to gain in grace and charm with each epoch down to the eighteenth century, when it attained its apogee of grace. A little severity returned with the Empire, which was the last period of our true French art.

The end of the eighteenth century and the nineteenth ought to remake art. But alas! the nineteenth century liberated the artisans and made them laborers, as if liberty could be the inspirer of art! It has killed art!

With liberty the delightful styles of other days have disappeared, we have been able to make only very bad copies of them. With the revolution art became a merchant; it has died of the change.

For a hundred years a great nightmare has clutched true artists by the throat, seeking to stifle their creative force. We have been haunted by the dream of gold.

The war will have changed all that.

Business, mean cares, the fixed idea of material preoccupations, dominated everything. Commerce is essentially the cultivation of egoism and of the narrowest egoism. With egoism one can do nothing beautiful, nothing great, nothing which is worth anything—nothing!

Through commerce egoism basely triumphed, stifling everything: thought, dreams, fine deeds, enthusiasm, the love of the things of the spirit.

People no longer thought of anything but getting rich. And for what object? To eat, and to do it badly, very badly, for even the taste for fine food had been lost. To be able to enjoy all the commonplace if not low pleasures, to be able to procure not the true luxury which consists in surrounding one's self with beautiful things, beautiful architecture, beautiful sculpture, beautiful paintings, but the luxury of the tradesman, which dazzles the ignorant, the luxury which does not demand any enlightened taste, any intelligence, but simply money.

This luxury consists in buying everything that is [illegible] and ugliest, everything which makes the [illegible] appearance, which produces the greatest effect on the crowd and which outshines the next door neighbor.

People grumbled without ceasing before the war that business was not going well. Nobody worried because art no longer existed.

Now, for us—for a people like ourselves, an old people that has shown in the Gothic style the supreme expression of its soul, which has since then been at the summit of civilization, there is not—there cannot be—luxury without art; that veritable art which we have not had for a hundred years.

The condition that existed before this war could not last. I believe that it will not last. We were marching with great strides toward decadence and war. The masses did not suspect it. I saw it and I suffered more than anyone, for I have passed my life in labor and ecstasy, as a passionate pilgrim who studies the story of the stones that the centuries have turned into monuments of beauty. It is in this way that I have come to understand after thirty years of study what few people have understood truly, in all its amplitude, its soul and its forms of expression, the beauty of Gothic sculpture and of all the sculpture which has been produced up to and including the Empire.

A storm was fatally destined to sweep away the evil ignorance and foolish vulgarity into which we were sinking. The storm has come—terrible, lasting, frightful.

For long months the elite of our youth has been sacrificed on the field of battle. The splendors of our heroic art, which seemed destined to defy eternity, have undergone the horrors of destruction. But this war was necessary in order that men, forgetting the commonplace, might find again the enthusiasm, the forgetfulness of self, the spirit of sacrifice for the love of one's country. Their egoism has become dumb. They have thought of the common good and have sacrificed to it their property and their lives. From their souls has sprung the first spark of the great fire which will purify the world.

I wish to believe—I will believe—that so much youth and beauty will not have been sacrificed in vain, but that they are offered as a holocaust to the god of love and beauty for the redemption of our sins; for the sowing of future harvests.

Our young heroes, our old cathedrals, fall in order that there may flourish again a youth pure, ardent, healthy, weary of materialism, eager for spirituality; that a renewed and sublime art may spring up again from our soil, washed and fertilized by blood.

The war is a scourge of God.

The heroism of our young men, the stones of our mutilated cathedrals, are the redemption of humanity. Our heroes are already in a state of grace. Those who are at the front have left behind them all their material cares, everything which held them in mediocrity.

They have been freed from the daily cares, the cares of money, the desires of luxury. They live with their own souls, face to face with death.

In their leisure hours have they not already regained a little of the simplicity of the artisan of other days who labored with love? Thanks to this unaccustomed leisure and to the material furnished by the quarries in which they are sheltered and the fragments of the projectiles aimed at them, may not the ingenuity which our soldiers are now showing in making things revive in the race the original pure taste which the men of the people possessed in our great Gothic epoch?

Those left behind, who do not fight, have continued more keenly than ever their habitual life, their commerce, with its egoistic and mean anxieties. Those who have not lost what is even more dear to them than their gold—their children—are not yet redeemed.

The war, by its long duration, will end in touching everybody. This duration is, without doubt, necessary.

Sorrow will be too vast and too universal not to be prolific. It ripens the soul. After the war a breath of idealism will pass over us, forcing us to raise our eyes above the earth, and with our eyes our souls. As soon as peace shall have returned, like the prodigal son, it will be necessary to learn the love of labor, not for the money that it brings and the vulgar pleasures which that gives, but for the beauty of the thing done.

The hour will then have come to realise this "Power of Labor" which I had dreamt of raising architecturally in France, or, perhaps with better hope in that America where sometimes gold is placed more generously at the service of an idea or of an artistic work—that "Tower of Labor" which bears at its base the labors of the day and the night; in its subterranean and its spiral spaces, the manual labors of man; and on its summit the blessings of thought and of the spirit.

In the clouds which overwhelm us I seek with hope the aurora of the new day in which the spirit will dominate and art will be born again.

Dancing that Really Builds Muscles

Miss Helen Moller Explains How More Vigor and Less Clothes in Our Dances Would Give Us Better Bodies

Miss Moller in a Vigorous Step That Could, She Thinks, Be Readily Modified for a Fox Trot or Other Popular Dance.

THE chief complaint of many against the modern dances is that they require too much muscle in the dancer. They are so vigorous.

Miss Helen C. Moller, an ingenious and graceful young woman from the West, has evolved a system that really builds muscles while one is dancing, and she believes, if discreetly adapted to the modern fox trots, one steps and so on, will enable any one to develop strength enough to go through a whole season without fatigue and to emerge [illegible] when entering. Miss Moller believes in injecting more vigor into the dance.

These remarkable photographs on this page, posed for by Miss Moller, will give an idea of the amount of vigor she thinks necessary. She has made converts of many representative society women of New York, Newport, Boston and the New England Summer colonies.

Recently she gave a demonstration with her pupils at the Hotel Gotham, in New York, for the benefit of the Polish Relief Fund.

"Free and graceful movements are equally impossible when there is great emaciation or excessive fat. In persons having sound organs and who lead a normal existence either of these conditions will disappear under the influence of dancing as it ought to be. Repetitions of certain prescribed movements of the body and limbs without any other motive are far from successful in producing this result. They may produce muscular development of certain parts of the body, but they will not develop all your muscles in their natural proportions—which is necessary in order to make of it a perfect instrument with which to obey the commands of the mind and to give true physical expression to the emotions.

"Prescribed and fixed, artificial, forms of dancing also fall short of these ideals. Before one proceeds to dance there should be an impulse that cannot be obeyed in any other way. The movements of the dancing body will then be natural and graceful and will express with spirit and truth the impulse which called them forth. If you hold yourself responsive to the beauties and charms of Nature, of music, or of any other inspiring form of art, you will find yourself more and more subject to definite pleasurable emotions, and to a desire to express them physically. Then, if you have enjoyed the great advantage of belonging to the "Back to Nature" movement, with its repudiation of cumbersome garments and its enjoyment of outdoor life, you will find yourself dancing—or wanting to dance—as the Arcadians danced.

"The impulse, the emotion, must come first. You may get it from Summer breezes whispering through the trees, from the perfume of wild flowers, from the twittering of birds, from the convolutions of a fleecy cloud sailing across the blue of the sky. When these charms fill you with happiness, and your feet are bare and your limbs free from the restraint of unnecessary garments—why, then you are going to dance as dancing ought to be. And the oftener you yield to that impulse the more perfect your body will become.

"I try to make my pupils bear these things constantly in mind. Perhaps an enthusiastic little girl will say: 'Oh, Miss Moller, may I dance your Pan dance?' I answer emphatically: 'No, you can't dance my Pan dance, or any other of my dances. They are my dances. Dance your own dance.' I try to get these beginners to feel a direct impulse, and then yield to it. If that means to roll over and over on the floor, very well, they are to do it. Pretty soon they are really dancing, joyously, gracefully and with individuality. It is all gain—not only physical, but mental and moral, for it is impossible for what is base and unworthy to enter where truth and beauty are established."

How Leggings Save Soldiers' Lives

LEGGINGS and puttees play a very important part in the uniform of the United States Marine Corps for the protection of the men against tropical diseases while on foreign shore service.

To the civilian mind leggings appear as purely a decorative adjunct to the uniform, useful only in horseback riding. It is very true that they are hot and uncomfortable to wear continually in the tropics, but it is there that they are most needed.

Many of the most dangerous tropical diseases are transmitted by the bites of insects. Among these are malaria, yellow fever, bubonic plague, hookworm, elephantiasis and tropical ulcer. Fleas and mosquitoes are the prime carriers, and make their first attack upon the ankles, thence working their way up over the whole body.

The ordinary flea jumps about one foot high in attacking men and animals. Although it is very possible for it to work its way up to the waist outside and enter the clothing above the belt line, yet the chances are against it. Ordinarily it will drop off or be brushed off.

Against mosquitoes and infected dirt and dampness leggings are good protection to the ankles. They lessen the danger of snake bite in the jungles, take the place of boots in protection against mud and water and make the attack of the flea so roundabout that his chances of success are much reduced.

Leather puttees, so universally worn when horseback riding, are worn by all officers in the Marine Corps while on shore duty, and are even more desirable than the heavy khaki leggings. It is impossible for the ordinary small snake or poisonous hornet to make any impression on the tough leather.

On long marches leggings make walking easier. They prevent the trousers from chafing at each step or being caught by briers in the underbrush.

In wearing them constantly, some precautions are necessary. They must not be worn at night, even if the soldier is obliged to sleep in his clothes, as constant wear for two days and nights is almost certain to produce a tropical rash, which is very irritating and difficult to eliminate. Talcum powder dusted on the feet each morning is often useful in keeping them dry and wholesome.

From the experience gained in the Spanish-American war and subsequently in the pacification of the Philippines leggings have been given a permanent place in the required equipment of all United States troops in the field and are proving of the greatest service in protecting the life and health of the men.

PITCHED HIS RICH WIFE OVER THE CLIFF?

How the New Scientific Detective Methods Are Trying to Decide Whether Mrs. Price's Death Was An Extraordinary Accident or a Peculiarly Cruel Murder

The Cliff Face Over Which Mrs. Price Either Fell or Was Hurled by Her Husband.

THERE is an old adage that murder will out, and another that the seeds of a man's destruction lie always in himself. Both of these expressions of human experience are repeated in another form by the formula of the modern scientific detectives, who claim that no criminal can so imitate natural occurences as to efface all traces, to a practised eye, of his own handiwork.

In other words, no man bent upon the commission of a crime can so arrange the circumstances of that crime that it will afterward appear, point by point, as an accident.

Particularly is this so of murder.

It is upon the lines of this theory that the famous French and German scientific detectives have achieved such startling successes.

The same methods are responsible for the recent arrest of Frederick T. Price, of Minneapolis, on the charge of murdering his rich young wife a little more than a year ago, and when he is tried these methods will be equally on trial.

On the evening of November 28, 1914, Price took Mrs. Price riding in his automobile along the Mississippi road, the principal pleasure-drive of that city. With them was Charles T. Etchison, a friend of the pair. Mrs. Price took with her a little pet dog.

At one point the road runs along the edge of a cliff about one hundred feet high, looking down into the valley of the river.

Here the auto stopped. A few minutes later men attracted by the shouts of Etchison, came running to the spot. Descending the cliff with him they found Price bending over his wife. She died without gaining consciousness.

Price told the police that a defective spark plug had caused him to stop at the place he did. Mrs. Price had gotten out with her dog. The dog had fallen over the cliff and, in an effort to save it, Mrs. Price had herself fallen.

Price's story was accepted at the time, but the scientific analysis of it was begun.

How the Police Reconstructed the Case.

It was discovered, first, that the dog when found was still alive. It was battered—instead of being scratched and torn as it would have been from a fall; battered as though it had been hurled out into the air for the more than one hundred foot descent from the boulevard. Furthermore its weight was not more than fifteen pounds, and so light a body would inevitably have been caught by projections and brush on the cliff's face. The police concluded therefore, that it must have been thrown.

Examination of Mrs. Price's body showed no bruises such as would have been caused by rolling down the cliff face. Neither was her clothing torn as it would have been if she had simply tottered over the edge and had crashed down through the brush and over the rocks.

Minute examination of the face of the cliff revealed no trace of the passage of any heavy object such as her body.

The wound that had caused her death was a jagged, crushing cut on the head. There were no stones nearby which could have produced this particular cut. There was no mark of blood or hair on the cliff face. The wound appeared as though it had been made by the bringing down of a heavy three-cornered rock upon her head while she lay where she was found.

Mrs. Price's body was fifteen feet from the base of the cliff. Experiments with dummies of her weight and size showed it was practically impossible for her to have fallen off the cliff and to have landed on that exact spot, but a dummy of her weight and size hurled from the cliff did strike on the exact spot where she was found.

Close examination of the defective spark plug led the police to believe that it had been only recently installed and that it had been defective when installed.

The police, reconstructing the tragedy along scientific lines, drew a picture entirely at variance with that of Price's. It had been planned, they argued, to stop at this, the dangerous, point on the boulevard. The defective spark plug had been substituted to give an excuse for stopping. Mrs. Price had been persuaded to leave the car. She had then been hurled over the cliff. The dog had been thrown after her. Mrs. Price had not been fatally hurt and she had been killed after her fall by someone battering in her head with a rock.

Mrs. Price, whose family is very rich, had just received, it was also discovered, $12,000 from one of her sources of income. Price immediately after her death, had himself declared her heir and executor.

The police wished, however, to make absolutely sure and, keeping Price continually under surveillance, they sought corroboration of their theory.

On last December, one year after Mrs. Price's death, they received information concerning Etchison that made them act. They arrested Price on a charge of bigamy, and a few days later he and Etchison were jointly indicted by the Minneapolis Grand Jury for murder in the first degree.

Persuaded by his wife in a dramatic scene Etchison made a confession. The confession, printed below, is, if true, a brief for the methods of the modern scientific detectives.

In his first statement Etchison said that Price had deliberately removed a good spark plug and had substituted a defective one to provide him with an excuse for stopping at the place where he had planned to throw his wife over the cliff. His second statement in full was as follows:

"It was about five years ago that I first met Price. I answered an advertisement for salesmen. He was manager for a concern selling scales. I was employed by him, and for about three years we were much together. Then we drifted apart, but kept in touch with each other. Later I came back to Minneapolis and started to work selling stock for a local concern. In the meantime I was unfortunate in business ventures and borrowed $1,050 from Price. For this loan he held my notes.

"Frequently he pressed me for payment and threatened to commence an action in the courts and take my furniture and other belongings.

"Help Me Do Away With My Wife."

"One day he came to my room in the Vendome Hotel, and after a few generalities startled me by saying that he should have money no matter how he got it. I suggested he borrow from his wife, for she had always told me her family had money. He replied that was impossible. This conversation was in October, 1911. At the conclusion of his talk Price turned to me and said suddenly:

"'Fred, listen. I've got to have money, even if I have to do away with my wife.'

"I thought him joking at first, and paid no attention to what he said. Swiftly Price turned to me, repeated the sentence and added, 'and you have got to help me.'

"'Help you do what?' I queried.

"'Do away with my wife,'" came the answer, and he continued: "'I will pay you well. Not only will I give back the notes for the money you owe, but I will give you some more, once she is out of the way.'

"I did not know that Price was serious. I tried to laugh it off. I knew he had been drinking a little and thought his talk wild. But he came again with the same proposition. I thought seriously of going to the authorities and telling them what he was proposing, but I knew he had influential friends and would probably prove to them I had lied. Being in his debt, I fenced for a time, and apparently acquiesced to his plan.

"'If you don't help me,' Price frequently told me, 'I will kill my wife in your presence and do it in a way that the blame will fall upon you. You have got to help me, and I have the plans all made.'

"On the day before November 28—the day Mrs. Price was killed—Price came and asked me to get tickets for some theatre, 'after that we will take an automobile,' he said with a look I did not like. I again thought of going to the authorities, but I doubted if they, or even the little wife, would believe what I had to say.

"I bought the tickets. The play was the 'Prince of Pilsen' at the Metropolitan. Mrs. Price enjoyed the play and laughed. Price watched it moodily. I was nervous. I tried to catch Price's eye, but he avoided me.

"I watched Mrs. Price—she was a dear, sweet little woman, and a warm friend of mine. Not for the world would I have harmed a hair of her head. Even as a boy I hated death and pain. I never shot a rabbit back in the days when I lived with my father and mother on a farm near Decatur, Ill., but I was sorry.

"I watched the little wife as she laughed at the play, and wondered. I was afraid of Price, and fearful of his power to take away my belongings. But through it all came the thought that Price would really do it.

"The Dark Ride to Death."

"Toward the Price home at Spruce Place he drove, and I hoped the ride would end there, but once the house was reached, he asked his wife to go in and get the dog and we would get a little air.

"No one will ever know how I felt when I saw Price piloting the machine in the direction of the dark river road. Mile after mile we travelled without a word. Mrs. Price and the dog were on the back seat. Several times I tried to talk, but Mrs. Price would not listen.

"In a ride of what seemed hours we finally reached the road that skirts the river. The machine stopped. Price said he had to fix the engine. A light from a nearby house shone across the path he had shown me.

"Price jumped from the automobile, and I recall his asking his wife to give the dog a little exercise. What happened after that is indistinct to me, but through it all I hoped Price would not have the nerve.

Charles D. Etchison, Who Confesses to Having Been a Witness of What He Charges Is Murder, and Mrs. Etchison, Whose Prayers Persuaded Her Husband to Make His Confession.

"I was numb with cold. I got out of the car and moved toward Price, but he avoided me. Then I started toward the woman. By this time she was standing near the cliff. I heard a scream and then something touched me and I heard the body fall.

"Price beckoned me to follow him. Hardly able to stand, and stiff from cold and fright, I stumbled along the path. Price walked quickly to the bottom of the cliff.

"There I saw the woman stretched on the ground. Slowly she turned to one side and drew her legs up under her. Then she moaned. I was almost paralyzed. Price stooped over the woman and straightened out her legs and arms, placing her arms at her side. Still she moaned. Price didn't say a word. I saw him stoop again, and I turned away. Then I heard the crunch of rock against bone, and the woman was still.

"Price called to me to summon help. 'Yell,' he told me, 'and get someone to help us up with the body.' I shambled up to the river road. There I met a man. I told him there had been an accident and begged him to hurry. Then an automobile came by. I stopped it and several men and women got out.

"I led the way back down the cliff. Suddenly Mrs. Price moaned again. Four men picked her up and carried her to the road. Once I was asked to help and I tried to do so, but I couldn't. Someone called an ambulance, I don't know who. It came. I found myself in the Price machine and someway drove to the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Dye, the latter the woman's sister. I took them to the hospital in Midway, where I was told to come. How I made that drive I will never know.

Frederick T. Price, Whose Arrest on the Charge of Wife Murder Is the Result of Police Investigation on the Lines of the Modern Scientific Criminology

"I had a puncture and drove from the hospital to a garage to fix the machine. Later Price came out. 'She is dead,' he said softly.

"'Did the fall kill her?' I asked.

"'No,' Price replied, 'it didn't.'

"He asked me if I had seen the dog.

"I said I had not. Later a policeman brought the dog to the hospital. It was the night Price went with me to my room at the Vendome Hotel and there we slept. He had a bottle of whiskey with him and took several drinks. Once I said 'Price, that was an awful thing to do.'

"'I know it,' he said, 'but it had to be done and now it is all over. Don't worry. You will get your money, and that's all you have to worry about.'

"The next day we had breakfast and separated. We avoided each other until the day of the funeral. I attended, because I could not stay away. I saw Price there and he nodded. 'All you have to do,' he told me, 'is to keep your mouth shut.'

"Morning and night I could hear the moans of the woman as we found her lying at the bottom of the cliff. Later Price came to me with my notes for $1,050 and paid me $1,500 in bills, promising there was more to come as soon as he had sold the bonds his wife had received from her father. I took my wife and went to my home in Illinois and spent Christmas. My wife asked what was worrying me. I again thought of going to the officers and telling them what I knew. Then I went to Washington. There Price sent me his personal check for $100 and a bank draft of $1,050. That was all he ever gave me.

"Then came the arrest in Washington. I told my story to Mr. Armstrong, Assistant County Attorney in Chicago, and it brought relief. I will repeat it again on the witness stand. It is the truth and the whole truth.

"Never before have I been in trouble. All the trouble I have ever known in this world has come to me through Price. I have no attorney. I need none. I will tell the Court and the jury my story. If I have done wrong they will punish me. But it is the truth that I did not believe Price would really carry out his threats. Of murder I am innocent. I was an unwilling witness to the killing of a woman who had always been sweet and kind to me."

Price, himself, declares he is innocent, that Etchison is a drug user and his story a complete fabrication.

The Minneapolis police have found that Price was married twice before he became the husband of the woman who died so tragically and, shortly after her death married again.

HOW THE WickedCunning OF A Love-

The Man You Married i

The Astonishing Ingenuity of a Clouded Bra
Enabled Miss Samuels to Keep Up a "Poison Pen" Letters to P
nence for a Year a

WITH a malevolent cunning which saved her from discovery for a year and a half, Miss Tessie Samuels has spread a flood of "poison pen" letters around the country and completely misled the post office detectives until she at last betrayed herself by a careless blunder. Miss Samuels is a love crazed girl who is perfectly sane on all other subjects

Miss Samuels fully realized the risk of being caught, and she devised a scheme which entirely threw the detectives off the scent. Living in the town of Goshen, New York, adjoining the town of Middletown, the girl was well acquainted with the great State Insane Asylum in the latter place. She cleverly decided to conduct her poison pen campaign in such a way as to lead the clues to the door of this lunatic asylum, where she shrewdly guessed it would be lost among the 2,000 patients.

So ingenious were Miss Samuels's methods that the detectives very soon decided that somewhere in the great establishment comprising the New York State Homeopathic Hospital for the Insane was hidden the lunatic who, since last July, when the authorities took up the case in earnest, had matched her befuddled wits against United States Post Office inspectors and detectives. Put away in an institution where it was supposed she would be securely out of the way of working harm, this lunatic the detectives concluded, with baffling cunning and ingenuity, and in spite of the watchful eyes of attendants, contrived to send an unknown number of scurrilous and scandalous poison pen letters broadcast, working untold harm. This is what Miss Samuels wanted the detectives to believe, and she succeeded

The poison-pen campaign conducted by Miss Samuels is unique and unlike all cases on record. Just how many of these malicious letters have been sent out it is impossible to gauge—in all probability they run into the hundreds. Miss Samuels herself does not know how many she wrote

Just how much trouble, how many estrangements of young lovers, or how many tragedies have been caused it is impossible to estimate. From the incomplete record at hand at least one suicide and the killing of the suicide's child, the breaking of a dozen engagements, and many cases of domestic troubles have been reasonably ascribed to the writer's wicked activities

Two young women who have received these poison-pen letters were thrown into nervous prostration, and one divorce was just narrowly averted. The extent of the mental anguish and social havoc caused will never be known. Miss Samuels has confessed to twenty letters; but Mr Kinsley, the handwriting expert, has collected thirty from her victims, and believes she has written several hundred

The present case, as it has been partially unravelled by Post Office Inspector T F. Fitch and the young woman's confessions, presents most extraordinary and quite unique aspects. It is unquestionably one of the most peculiar of "poison pen" campaigns For the first time the activities of a "poison pen" writer have centred in society circles in New York While other "poison pen" campaigns have continued for a longer period of time, probably none has ever so baffled the trained minds of the United States Post Office.

The circulation of these defamatory letters was brought to the attention of the Post Office authorities last June, and despite an investigation extending through six months and more no clue had led to the author. While the trail had led unquestionably to one source, the mystery regarding the writer had become deeper than ever. And while the institution in which the writer was believed to have lived had been watched, while a careful espionage had been kept upon the post offices in the two towns from which most of the letters were sent, the letters continued to go forth as before.

It now appears that Miss Samuels had taken into account all this in planning her wholesale campaign of letter-writing. She was an intelligent young woman of twenty-five and a social favorite. She read the newspapers, knew about the methods of detectives and decided to plant an ingenious network of apparent clues that would point to the hand of one of the inmates of the lunatic asylum. If she could succeed in focusing the minds of the detectives on the crazy crowd in the asylum she could continue to work in security

How well Miss Samuels constructed her plans can, perhaps, best be seen by following the line of investigation, reasonings and conclusions of the detectives as they labored in the dark—every clue leading them to the asylum, just as Miss Samuels expected it would

When the Post Office men settled down to their work the first question was to decide whether they had to deal with a sane person with a grievance or a lunatic with no personal malice against the victims

Up to the time of the arrest of Miss Samuels a total of thirty letters had been turned over to the Post Office authorities and to William J. Kinsley, the handwriting expert. All of the letters, in handwriting and phraseology, are identical Each letter begins thus:

Her Astounding Cunning in Imitating the Methods of an Asylum Inmate

"Write to you at random being a total stranger to you to put you wise to the fact that the man you married (here follows the name of the woman's fiance) is my husband and the father of my twin babies, six months old. He was forced to marry me by an irate father at the point of a shotgun."

Then followed a flow of words heard only in the very gutters of abandoned society and mention of vice and degradation which startled even the hardened minds of the detectives.

With the exception of two letters, all were received by young women shortly after their engagement had been announced in the society columns of the daily newspapers. Two of the women received the letter shortly after their marriage. It was evident, therefore, that the writer secured her information regarding coming nuptials from newspapers. The phraseology of the letter is significant. There is a hysterical reiteration of charges which indicate origin in a diseased mind. Another point is even more significant.

In all of the poison pen campaigns on record people singled out for attack have received a series of letters—the first would be followed by a second and a third, and in most cases many more.

In the present case the writer simply sent one letter to each victim—with one exception. The charge made against the young woman's intended husband in each case is the same. The style of handwriting in all of the letters is alike

That these letters were written in batches was shown by the fact that while the handwriting in style, size and spacing is the same, the name of the man mentioned was invariably written in a close, cramped manner, the last name often running either under or above the phrase concluding the sentence. This proved that the letters were written in large numbers, with a space left blank for the insertion of the name of the man to be assailed.

What did this further indicate? That the letters were written by somebody under restraint during periods of leisure and freedom from restraint. Some of the patients in insane asylums are allowed considerable liberty; others are given periods of freedom in the grounds. During such a period the insane author would have an opportunity of writing a number of letters, which she could hide and hold in reserve

Apparently Miss Samuels foresaw that this construction would be put on this peculiarity of the letters—and she guessed right.

Middletown (N. Y.) State Insane Hospital—Main Building and Park

When this lunatic had the opportunity of reading the announcement of an engagement in a newspaper it would then be comparatively easy to write the name of the man mentioned in the blank space, a procedure indicated by the hurried, close, cramped writing of the name. In every case the full name of the man accused was given. This further proved that the information regarding engagements was secured from society announcements in which the formal custom of using the full name is always observed.

In a number of cases there had been a considerable period of delay between the date at the head of the letter and the post office date of mailing. In one case a letter was dated on the fifth of the month and was mailed on the tenth, a delay of five days after the preparation of the letter. What did this indicate? That the letters were mailed furtively—that they were surreptitiously slipped to some one for mailing purposes only when opportunity occurred

If the person writing these scurrilous letters was free and lived in a small community, the detectives inferred there would be no necessity for such delay. Morbidly obsessed with the desire to break up engagements she would mail her attack with the most eager promptitude. The fact that the letters were prepared and dated almost in every case on the day following the published announcement of an engagement illustrates the alertness of this active maniac.

Among the recipients of these letters was Mrs Claude A. Thompson, wife of Deputy State Attorney Thompson, of New York. Mrs. Thompson, who was Miss Nellie O. Hoffman, of Towanda, Pa., was married to Mr. Thompson on October 13, 1915. Their engagement was announced in the Philadelphia newspapers and the report of their marriage was published in the New York newspapers

Within two weeks after the marriage, Mrs. Thompson received a "poison pen" letter, attacking her husband and charging him with being the husband of the writer and the father of her twins. As United States Prosecuting Attorney, Mr. Thompson has charge of directing post office investigations and prosecutions. The sending of a letter, in which he was himself attacked, to his wife, was indubitably the rash act of a lunatic, the detectives reasoned

Additional evidence further proved to the minds of the officers that the author of these letters was insane. While the "poison pen" letter is the weapon of the weak and cowardly, the authors are often people of otherwise established sanity. The motive is usually inspired by some personal grievance

In addition to the letter sent to Mrs. Thompson, the thirty others reported were sent to various people, all of sufficient prominence to appear in the society columns of the daily press. This indiscriminate sending of letters to young women could be only the work of a lunatic. The fact that only one letter was sent and was not followed by others demonstrated that the writer was not moved by any personal motive. The motive could be only that of a lunatic obsessed with a mania to break up intended marriages. Thus they reasoned as the writer intended they should reason.

How the Detectives Fell Into the Trap Miss Samuels Laid

Where did the trail to the source of these letters lead? The trail led to one village. It led to one institution. Of the thirty letters turned over to the authorities, the first was mailed fifteen months ago from Middletown, N. Y. The most recent letter, which was turned over to Mr. Kinsley, was mailed from Middletown. Two letters were mailed from the Grand Central Station, N Y., and two from Long Island. That both earliest and most recent letters reported were dispatched from the same place, with an intervening lapse of fifteen months, proved that the writer operated from Middletown and had lived there since her activities began. What about the letters mailed from places so distant as Long Island and New York?

The State Homeopathic Hospital for the Insane consists of thirty buildings. The grounds comprise nearly three hundred acres, mostly on the outskirts but within the limits of Middletown. Visitors constantly arrive at the institution, and are allowed the freedom of the grounds.

Here, argued the detectives, among over 2,000 patients, the writer of these poison pen letters lives. At every available opportunity she feverishly reads the newspapers. During periods of freedom she keeps ahead in her supply by writing letters in batches. When she sees the published announcement of an engagement, it is the work of but a few minutes in the public reading room to write the name of the man mentioned in the announcement in the blank space in her form letter, slip the communication into an envelope and address the envelope to the girl whose engagement has been announced.

It is quite easy, then, to keep the letter in the folds of her dress until, some day when she is permitted to walk the grounds, she can give the letter to some innocent visitor and ask him or her to mail it for her. Generally the innocent visitors thus entrusted with letters would mail them from Middletown Post Office, or from the nearby town of Goshen. Now and then a visitor might put the letter into his coat pocket and forget to mail it at Middletown. He might remember it on his return to New York or his home town. This would explain the mailing of letters from the Grand Central Station and Long Island towns.

This was the way Miss Samuels reasoned that the detectives would reason—and she was right.

All the letters, except two, were written on ordinary writing paper of cheap quality. One, however, was written on stationery of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. Did this indicate that the writer had visited New York? This letter was mailed from Middletown.

It is not uncommon for people who stay at hotels or who write letters from hotel writing rooms to slip several sheets of paper and envelopes in their pocket in case they wish to write while traveling. It is quite probable that some person visiting the institution at Middletown might carry such hotel stationery in their pockets. The writer of these anonymous missives being confined in the asylum might have cunningly wished to mislead the detectives by the use of an outside letterhead. In this way the Waldorf-Astoria sheet would confirm the officers in the belief that they had to deal with a clever inmate of the asylum.

From the known facts the detectives argued that the writer of these wicked missives has operated from Middletown for a period of at least a year and a half. But how did she secure information regarding engagements?

While the thirty letters so far handed over to the authorities were written to young women prominent in social life in New York City, reports have come from the South to the effect that young women of social prominence about to marry have also received similar letters. The receipt of a letter couched in the same terms by a young woman prominent in the most exclusive society of Philadelphia was recently reported to Mr. Kinsley. This young woman received the letter last Easter, shortly after the announcement of her engagement in the Philadelphia newspapers. How could an inmate of the institution at Middletown have access to Philadelphia and Southern papers?

In the State Homeopathic Hospital at Middletown is a public reading room supplied with books and magazines. No copies of newspapers excepting those published in Middletown are received regularly for the use of the patients. Patients are, however, allowed to receive any newspapers they desire.

Upon investigation at the institution the detectives learned, as Miss Samuels knew they would, that a number of patients receive newspapers daily from New York, Philadelphia and other cities. Two local newspapers at Middletown receive exchange copies of out-of-town newspapers. It was also learned, upon inquiry, that several of the patients who are allowed considerable liberty have called at these newspaper offices for copies of these out-of-town papers. One patient has made it a custom to call at the newspaper offices for these papers and take them to the institution there. These were given to various patients. Obviously it had been quite easy for the "poison pen" maniac to secure her information within the confines of the institution.

The Blunder That Delivered Her Into the Hands of Postal Inspectors

One particular New York newspaper, it had been learned, is widely read at the hospital. It is the favorite morning paper of the majority whose minds are affected. It was a significant fact to the detectives that a majority of the New York women who received letters got them almost immediately after their wedding announcement had been published in this paper.

A unique phase of the case is that Miss Samuels observed distinctions of class. She was exclusive in her attacks. All of st office authorities last June. The ter reported had, however, been re-ght months previous. An investiwas begun, but the mystery became and deeper. William J. Kinsley's n was called to the matter last Sep-

r. The letter first turned over to him had been mailed in
t. Mr. Kinsley consulted the post office inspectors the writer of the poison-pen letters was an inmate of the Middletown asylum—that was what Miss Samuels had hat the investigating officers should conclude; and actly the conclusion they arrived at. The detectives he asylum, watched the patients and spread a net to writer. This all became known to Miss Samuels, and s emboldened to go on with her letter-writing

Post Office Inspectors Fitch and Duryea were not en-persuaded that the evidence conclusively pointed to the asylum. They were sure they had to deal with a lunatic:
rhaps one whose mind was perfectly sound on all matters this one mania. This person might be possessed of great g in covering her tracks; she might never have been conn an asylum.

ese inspectors, Fitch and Duryea, watched the flow of for some exceptional fact or unusual circumstance which offer even a slender thread of a clue. Whoever it was as so cunningly covering her trail would surely sooner or make a blunder. Long experience had taught them this fficers were right. At last Miss Samuels made a false
—a small matter, but fatal.

ldenly one day in the middle of December last the inspec-eyes fell upon the well-known handwriting of the poisonriter as they happened to be watching the mail in the post office in Goshen. Turning the envelope over they y noticed the printed words on the back, "PRIVATE LION, MT. SINAI HOSPITAL."

the first train out of Goshen were Fitch and Duryea. Late evening they reached Mt. Sinai Hospital in New York. after hour they patiently went over the names and ads of the hospital patients.

ldenly they stopped at this entry on the records: "Mrs.

"Oh, about twenty five, I should say."

"Nervous sort of a girl?"

"Yes, she was."

"Rather sad, melancholy and a little queer acting?"

"Yes. You know her?

"No," said the inspector, "but I hope to very soon. Thank you. Good by."

When the morning train came into Goshen next day Fitch and Duryea separated and strolled about town in different directions. Three hours later they met near the house of Mr. Samuels, wealthy manufacturer of Goshen. In that three hours the inspectors had gathered the life history of every member of the Samuels household—especially of Miss Tessie

"As I Was Robbed of My Happiness, So Would I Rob Them of Theirs"

Ringing the doorbell of the Samuels home, the post office inspectors took Miss Samuels into custody, and very shortly the young woman in tears confessed that she, alone and unaided, had written and mailed the mysterious letters. She confessed to "about twenty," although, as already stated, thirty are in the hands of the authorities. There is reason to believe that the number may have run into several hundreds.

Pressed for her reason for writing these wicked letters to women she had never seen, the girl laid bare a corner of her own heart and said:

"Well, of course, I know it is no excuse, still I might as well tell you. Two years ago I was engaged to be married. Devotedly I loved that man with all my heart. Someone sent me a poisoned-pen letter. I believed it and indignantly broke my engagement.

"I know now that there was not one word of truth in that wicked letter. But it ruined my life, and in the bitterness of my soul I determined to spread as much misery as I could among engaged couples. As I was cruelly robbed of my happiness, so would I rob them of theirs. The letters I have written were practically copies of the letter that ruined my life."

Miss Samuels has been a changed girl. In the last two years she became nervous, irritable and eccentric. She was an omnivorous newspaper reader. Her home is piled ceiling high with newspapers. The post office officials and the family and friends of the girl regard her as undoubtedly insane—at least in the direction of her mania.

The evils wrought by such letters are manifold. Suspicion regarding the authorship of "poison pen" letters more often than not fastens upon innocent persons. In the present case a number of people have emphatically declared that they knew the identity of the writer. Some have even written letters in which they mentioned the names of the people they suspected. The recipient of such a letter would be naturally led to believe that the author was some one who was moved by a personal grievance.

"On October 5, 1915, Mrs. Charles F. Schmidt killed herself and her six-year-old son at the Hotel Wellington, in New York, after receiving a letter making shocking charges against her husband."

This is usually some one included in the circle of acquaintances. Had the authorship of the letters in this case not been traced to the real author, grave social quarrels and disturbances might have ensued. One young man, whose fiancee received a letter, asserted to Mr. Kinsley that he definitely knew the author was a college chum who was inspired by envy and jealous chagrin.

"No," said Mr. Kinsley, "the author is not a college chum. The author is some one whom you do not know."

The detectives were certain from the first that the author of the letters was a woman. Three out of every four "poison pen" letters, according to Mr. Kinsley, are written by women.

As has already been said, no one knows how many letters Miss Samuels has written. It will never be known how many of her cruel missives hit the mark and destroyed the happiness of engaged couples.

On October 5, 1915, Mrs. Charles F. Schmidt killed herself and her six-year-old son at the Hotel Wellington in New York after receiving a letter making shocking charges against her husband. This woman, high strung and sensitive, believed the charges. For often anonymous letters are written with fiendish cunning. Mrs. Schmidt became melancholic and finally committed suicide. Had she shown him the letters she received, her husband declared, he could at once have proved the absurdity of the charges. But in more cases than one the women who receive such letters never tell their husbands. They suffer and cherish their supposed wrongs in secret. Heartbroken, Mr. Schmidt left the United States and went to South America.

One of the more recent letters known to have been received was mailed to Miss Elsie Seydel, of No. 400 West One Hundred and Fifty-third street, New York City. The society columns of the newspapers had recently announced her engagement to Mr Samuel Shary. This letter was posted on December 11, and was stamped on a train between New York City and Salamander, N. Y. Miss Seydel had read of the poisoned pen campaign in the newspapers, and had the good sense not to be distressed in mind over the letter she received

The daughter of Frederick Gerken, the banker, engaged to Mr. Joseph L. Egan, the lawyer of the Western Union Telegraph legal department, received one of the poisoned pen letters. The bride-to-be was thrown into hysterics by the shocking statements in the anonymous letter. The young woman and her mother were in a condition of nervous collapse, and were under the care of a physician for several days.

Mr. T. D. Nolan, a well known man of social position in New Orleans, was engaged to Miss Piggott, of Brooklyn. Soon after the newspapers announced the approaching wedding Miss Piggott was horrified to receive one of Miss Samuel's communications. Having full faith in the man she was to marry, and having read in the newspapers of the poisoned pen campaign, she turned the wicked letter over to Mr. Nolan.

"I was, of course, very much worried, not knowing what sort of lunatic was at large, with, perhaps, designs upon me or Miss Piggott," said Mr. Nolan. "We had eight detectives in the church looking for some woman crank during the wedding ceremony, and I was mighty happy when I got my bride safely out of the church without any misfortune."

Miss Florence Thompson, of Goshen, Miss Samuel's native town, was the belle of the village. When her engagement was announced Miss Samuels promptly sent her one of her letters. Miss Thompson seemed so happy and buoyant in her new-found joy that Miss Samuels devoted special attention to her. To Miss Thompson was sent not one, but three successive letters, which nearly upset her peace of mind and faith in the man she was about to marry.

Mr. W. J. Kinsley, the Handwriting Expert

Fortunately she, too, had read of the poisoned pen campaign, and discussed the letters with her fiance, Mr. Pope, now her husband, who promptly turned the letters over to the authorities and reassured his bride-to-be that the letters were the vicious handiwork of a jealous enemy or a lunatic.

"You ask what character of people usually write such letters," said Mr. Kinsley. "One often is amazed at what an investigation reveals. When you come to trace down these letters to their source you will sometimes find the author is a woman of charming manners enjoying a social position in her community. Again the clue leads to some shy, demure and prudent spinster whose chief interest in life apparently is in church work, who belongs to all the ladies' guilds and church societies and who is the last person in the community people would suspect. Again you will find some one with a dramatic instinct that has gone wrong."

What motives inspire the writers of "poison pen" letters?

From recorded cases the motives generally are rivalry in love, social jealousy, domestic jealousy and business or professional envy. In the smaller cities and towns of the country the motive in nine cases out of ten is social jealousy. One woman envies the popularity of another woman, or chafes from the fact that the husband of her friend enjoys an income larger than the income of her own husband. Then the town is set by its ears by anonymous attacks and mysteriously disseminated scandals.

By Mr. Irving Brokaw

A Champion Figure Skater of America, Author of the "Art of Skating," Etc.

ANY one who has studied and mastered the elementary school figures described in the preceding articles will be in a position to take up the Valse and other simple ice-dances. I shall leave the remaining school figures, the Bracket, Rocker and Counter, therefore, for a later article.

The Valse will be more effective to raise the standard of proficiency among skaters in general than any other figure, because people otherwise unambitious to acquire proficiency will be aroused enough by seeing the Valse well performed to practise it as an essential to skating.

The credit for the introduction of waltzing on ice has been claimed by various countries. In this connection it may be interesting to note that it originated here in the early sixties, a fact in which we may take no little pride. I have seen it described in an American book published at that time.

There are two styles of valsing on skates. One is the Circular Valse and the other the Serpentine. There is no difference in the steps, but the course followed by the skaters is quite different.

In the Circular Valse the couples revolve around large circles, in the form of a single or double eight, which take up nearly the full width of the rink or other skating surface, all making their turns together in time to the music.

In the Serpentine Valse the skaters follow waving lines along each side of the rink, with a wide curve at each end, the skaters advancing to and receding from the centre line and continually reversing their direction of turning as they get onto the different curves. Having only half the width of the rink available for their strokes, these are necessarily curtailed, and, as a rule, it is impossible to take more than two consecutive strokes in one direction (except at the ends of the rink), for it is not safe to cross the centre line as the couples on the other side are progressing in the opposite direction, and a collision would be disastrous.

In the Circular Valse, on the other hand, there is practically no danger from collision, for when two couples do come together the result is harmless, as they they are both travelling in the same direction. Then again in this method there are so-called "safety zones" in which the couples may stand when not skating, when there is no such possibility in the Serpentine style.

For these reasons I am a strong advocate of the Circular Valse, and hope that this method will be pretty generally taken up, in order that we may standardize our dances on the ice. Those who have never followed any particular system of valsing will find the Circular Valse the easier of the two styles, and those who have hitherto followed the Serpentine system will find no difficulty in making the change.

Valsing on skates has nothing in common with the ballroom waltz except the position of the partners, their simultaneous rotation and their execution of the figure to waltz music.

It is a good idea for skaters first to learn what the valse figure is and to practise it persistently alone before trying it with a partner.

The steps of the valse are long, even, sustained glides of several yards in length, with smooth, circling movements.

In its simplest form the valse step is nothing more than an ordinary forward outside edge on one foot, followed by a three-turn to the back inside edge on the same foot, and then a passing, with a gliding step—not a drop—to the backward outside edge on the other foot.

This inside backward edge—the tail of the three—is often held for a yard or two before gliding to the outside backward on the other foot.

While tracing this last step, outside backward, the body should be gradually turning, to allow the skater to pass straight on to the outside forward on the original foot, when the figure may be repeated.

It is obvious, from their relative positions, that when the man is moving on forward curves his partner will be moving on backward ones, on opposite but reverse feet, when he is on backward curves she will be on forward ones; and further, when he is cutting the three-turn she will be passing from her outside forward edge on her other foot, and vice versa.

The three turn, as described, has been confined to the left foot, and brings about a rotation of the valsers counter-clockwise. To change or reverse this rotation, the figure is done similarly on the right foot, that is to say, the three-turn, which gives the rotation, is now done on the right foot.

Usually two or three turns are done on the left foot, counter-clockwise rotation, to one or two on the right; the reverse, when the rotation is changed back to the first, and so on, effecting a general progression of the valsers around the skating area.

The main effect and charm of the valse depend on the manner in which the change of rotation is accomplished. When it is desired to make the change the man, who is usually leading and guiding, instead of cutting another three holds his forward outside edge, and then, after having traced thereon a fair sized plain circle rocks over to the forward outside edge on the other foot, preparatory to cutting the three-turn before explained. While doing this his partner is tracing the corresponding backward outside edges—of course, on opposite feet.

By most skaters this rotation is effected by means of a sudden jerk or heaving over—the man crossing one foot over the other, in order to obtain the necessary push to force his partner round the other way. Good performers also effect the rotation by crossing the foot, but in such a manner as to disguise the movement as much as possible, by just slipping the foot over the other in a gliding step. One never observes a good lady valser make use of the cross-step backward to change her rotation.

The lady, instead of passing straight from the backward edge on one foot to the same edge on the other foot, should glide over, by a gradual change of edge, from the outside to the inside, on the first foot, tracing thereon an inside curve often several yards long, before passing from that foot to the outside back on the other. This will enable her partner—who at the same time changes from his forward outside to a curve on the inside—to skate round her smoothly and easily at the proper angle; and their change of rotation will therefore be effected by an easy, even, floating swing of the body, delightful to behold and still more delightful to experience.

For practice in acquiring the valse steps, nothing can be better than doing the figure alone in an eight to a centre—the rotation being changed by the lady on her backward edge and by the gentleman on his forward edge at the centre of the eight.

Except in making the forward three-turns, the lady should be on the backward edges, for the reason that as her partner must take the leading or guiding part, he must of necessity be free to look in the direction of motion.

As the movements must be as supple and as smooth as possible, all signs of effort should be concealed, ease and grace being the most essential characteristics of the movement.

Unity of movement may, perhaps be said to come next in importance to ease and grace; this can only be attained by the motions of the gentleman's arms and legs acting in unity with those of the lady.

The valsing couple should pay special attention to the suppleness of the tracing or employed leg, which should never be held straight or rigid, but should be bent easily before and after each turn; it should be slowly straightened at the beginning of every edge to give proper graceful and easy effect.

During the change from one foot to the other on the back edges the lady's tracing foot should make a slight change of edge, so that at this point a kind of undulatory effect can be given to the figure.

To make the change from inside backward to outside backward on the other absolutely imperceptible, one foot should be placed on the ice as near as possible to the other during the execution of the three turns.

It is imperative to skate in perfect rhythm or time to the music, which must be fast enough to enable the valsers to give plenty of action to the dance.

All edges should show similarity of curve; therefore, the edges should be nearly equal in length. To skate the valse in eight form, the partners must keep turning smoothly during the change in the centre and carefully avoid the tendency to long, straight edges. To avoid irregularity of movement the strike-off must be simultaneous.

The head should be held erect, and the body upright but flexible. Each partner should be square and opposite to each other, and there should be no turning of the head to look around before cutting the three-turn. The curve should be skated with firmness and precision, and, as a general rule, held for something like a fourth or a third of a circle both before and after the turn is cut. The pair skating together—the lady taking the man's part and the man the lady's part—is an excellent aid to proficiency.

The mode of starting the valse figure should not be haphazard but with definite movements in concert and in step. Nor should it be brought to an end abruptly. One way is for the man, just before the last bar or two of music, to release his partner's waist and then going forward on his left and she backward on her right, just with the final notes, swing or float her off on a long, sweeping back spiral.

A further enchantment of the valse is known as the "waves." The simple wave consists in a uniform rise from the start of the forward outside of the valse figure during the whole curve, up to the three-turn, and an equally even drop after the turn. The wavy motion thus resulting is produced by an alternate, gradual straightening up and bending down of the knee and ankle of the tracing leg.

The "back double wave," invented by Miss Harrison, of the Prince's Skating Club, London, and described by Ernest Law in his book, "Valsing on Ice," consists of a first wavelet executed during the change of edge, which effects the rotation—in this instance the lady's left back outside to inside edge—and of a second wavelet executed toward the end of the inside edge.

If after only one three-turn has been cut in either direction by each partner, involving one complete revolution of the pair, the rotation is alternated at once, then the long intermediate changing strokes, whereon the lady travels backward in a single, succeeded by a double wave, will occur so frequently as to occupy exactly half the musical time of the valse, and thereby, in the view of some affording the most delightful way of skating the valse figure.

In the next article, we will endeavor to explain other dances, such as the 10-step, Mohawk, the 14-step, the Jackson Haines Valse, the Rocker Valse, etc.

Women Can Learn to Love but Men Can't

IF a man does not love a woman at the time he marries her he never will. She may keep the best house in town, cook the best meals and be an ideal wife, but all is lost for her. Man never changes. He cannot be taught to love. Woman can. If the man she marries is kind to her and makes her happy she soon learns her lesson of love, and like the cat on the hearth, begins to purr and settle down for a long stay. But man must love from the start; must be wild about his wife to be a faithful husband.

He would rather eat burned toast day after day prepared by a well loved wife than to eat a banquet from the hands of a wife who does not fill his heart with thrills. Woman, who can be tamed by the comforts of life, can marry a man, and although she may not be head over heels in love at the time of her marriage she will soon find a sparkle of love growing up in her heart.

If a young man realizes that his fiancee does not really love him as he loves her, he need not be at all alarmed, for, if he intends to make a kind, thoughtful and loving husband, he will soon gain all the love he desires. But if a girl is engaged to a man who really cares little about her she would take the wisest step of her life by breaking the engagement. You can teach man art, music and all the sciences in life; we can make an excellent business man out of him, but we cannot teach him to love a girl because she is good or has some wonderful talent; we cannot make him a good husband or even teach him the art of pretending to be one.

Woman can learn to love as easily as to learn a new stitch in crocheting, or she can pretend to be in love, if the case demands. The little girl starts out in life by pretending she is mother to a great wax doll, she pretends she is rich, is married, a society lady and is happy in her dreams. But who ever heard of a boy pretending or wanting to be a father and married before his time?

The little things of life make the woman's world. Man only looks at the big side, the vital question. He asks himself first if he loves the girl and then he goes into details later, the fact whether she is a good housekeeper, a dainty cook and clever at conversation. Woman goes into detail first; she wonders what the man's salary is, what his habits are, his disposition and whether he would make a good husband, and only lastly if she loves him.

The man who tries to pretend he is in love soon shows his cards at the game, and his wife sees his true attitude. But the man's nature is broad and if he loves as he must, right from first sight, he always loves. It does not matter how poor the wife of his choice may make, his love is ever true. Woman often ceases to love the moment her husband does not provide for her and make her hearth a comfortable one. Although we can never teach a man to love a woman, his love, once started, never turns into ice.

WHY WEARING SKIRTS MAKES A MAN EFFEMINATE

Prof. Lough Explains the Surprising New Rule of the Yale Faculty Forbidding Students in the College Dramatic Societies to Impersonate Female Characters for Longer Than One Year

Charming Octette Chorus of College Boys in Skirts.

Mr. Brown Rolston as "The Sultan's Favorite Daughter" in a Princeton College Play.

By Dr. James E. Lough,

Professor of Experimental Psychology New York University

DOES continued impersonation of female characters have a tendency to make college dramatic society men effeminate? Dean Frederick S. Jones of Yale [illegible] has followed his statement by a ruling which prohibits Yale men from wearing petticoats for more than one year in succession in plays given by the University Dramatic Association.

To the man on the street, Professor [illegible] pronouncement comes as a rather startling disclosure. We have always [illegible] of the American college [illegible] of red-blooded instincts and of [illegible] upon football [illegible] usually suggest that the [illegible] creature of petticoats. [illegible] of the criticism of our [illegible] has been that there was [illegible] emphasis put upon athletics and not enough upon the cultural phases of education.

Upon the first reading of Dean Jones's words we are apt to assume that he has been unduly alarmed: that his decision must follow an isolated observation. But from the point of view of the psychologist the Yale professor seems to be very close to the truth.

Before we go further, it is interesting to note that Dean Jones is not the first to warn us of the effeminizing influence of women's roles upon college men. One of the most successful rowing coaches this country has produced announced publicly last year that no man who took the part of a woman in the college plays could hope for a seat in the university boats. At the time this ruling was accepted as an excusable oddity from a rough and ready athletic coach who probably knew more about strong backs and steady hearts than he did about the drama. We now have the testimony of both the college coach and the University professor upon the matter. Let us [illegible] how the psychologist can explain the situation. How can a strong, normal American boy have his masculine virility overcome by the playful use of skirts? What is there in the atmosphere and association and point of view of feminine [illegible] which would atrophy the red [illegible]

For those who are unfamiliar with college dramatics, it might be well to ex[illegible] the rehearsal of a university play covers many months. During that time the men who take the feminine roles are obliged to talk, act and dress like women for several hours each day. So [illegible] they to make their stage parts perfect, so desirous are they of having the play a success, that they imitate women even when they are not rehearsing. They study the mannerisms of the college town girls, the latest feminine walk, manner of using the hands and fingers, the pose, the tilt of the chin, the expressive manipulation of the eyes and lips.

The imitation, of course, does not stop here. It extends to the tone of the voice, the enunciation of words, the modulation of tones. For months and months this study of feminine foibles goes on and all the time the student is consciously perfecting his womanly charms and unconsciously cloaking his masculine virility.

The American college student has strong reactive power to almost any set of circumstances. I have never seen any permanent effeminate results from the college plays. I have noted that several students who played women's parts for a season had difficulty in forgetting their "ladylike" ways. But these cases were always humorous and never serious. Several of my friends in the college world have told me of a number of cases of permanent influence. They have cited men who made wonderful successes of feminine roles in their university dramatic associations and who never quite redeemed themselves from the long study of feminine mannerisms.

The first interest of the psychologist in this study centers around the theory of habit. According to James "an acquired habit from the physiological point of view is nothing but a new pathway of [illegible] which certain incoming currents ever after tend to escape." Habit is at bottom a physical principle. Most habits are formed before one reaches the age of thirty. By the time the average man is thirty his character is set and will never soften again.

The critical period in the formation of professional and intellectual habits is between twenty and thirty. The personal habits, such as VOCALIZATION, PRONUNCIATION GESTURE MOTION and ADDRESS form before and usually are set at twenty. The average college student enters the American college between the ages of sixteen and twenty. His habits of manner and address and speech are still in a plastic state. I use plasticity in the James sense of the word. It "means the possession of structure weak enough to yield to an influence, but strong enough not to yield all at once."

According to the psychologist's data, then the average college student is living through a period when he is peculiarly adaptable to physical habits of manner and speech. Also, if these manners are practised at length during the period of years leading up to and through the age of twenty, we are passing through the vital period when a young man's habits are setting for all time.

Here I think we have the basis of the possible danger. If it is true that our distinctions of manner and speech are in this plastic state during these college years, it does not need over emphasis to demonstrate that a long and continued study and imitation of feminine roles might have an undesirable effect upon men.

Let us follow for a minute the natural course of a young man of eighteen who applies for a position on his college dramatic team. The play has been selected and the professional coaches are about to determine who shall play the feminine roles. They carefully examine every man present in the association for the feminine type. Naturally, the men who look most like women are selected. There is your weak approach. The men who by nature have been made most effeminate are the best raw material for the coaches. I do not mean to insinuate that these men are "perfect ladies." They probably have all the masculine qualities, but nature builds a type of man with feminine physical characteristics, the same as she builds a type of woman with masculine characteristics.

We start our young man who at least has a natural predisposition toward the feminine type in the feminine role. From now on through a long series of months this student who ought to be out developing his masculine tendencies is turned back to his natural weakness and made to imitate in walk, look and gesture the womanly type. Is it any wonder that in his plastic state he unconsciously acquires feminine characteristics? Nature has so designed him at this period of his life that he is particularly open to the formation, the final formation of physical habits. And gradually, also at this age, these habits are setting, slowly but surely setting, with all the finality of concrete.

Mr. Kinney of Columbia Resting After a Skirt Dance.

Mr. Leroy K. Howe of Princeton as "Mrs. Stroughton, a Suffragette," in a Triangle Club Musical Comedy.

This problem does not stop with the college men. It runs over into the life of the college girl. The same set of conditions is true of the university woman. For years college girls have assumed the male roles in their dramatic societies. I have in mind a young lady of decided masculine qualities who was the most successful 'man actor' in her college plays. All during her course she impersonated masculine roles with marked success. The predisposition which she exhibited toward the masculine type was seized upon by the college coaches and developed and enlarged until to-day I think the young woman, in voice, manner AND THOUGHT could pass for a man almost anywhere. Curiously enough, she has joined with her father in the running of a machine shop. She dons a pair of overalls and runs the factory with the precision and efficiency of a highly trained executive.

Another illustration is called to my mind of a young man who entered the millinery business at an early age and was very successful. The result of his constant contact with his woman customers has been to eliminate much of his normal masculinity and endow him with many little effeminate mannerisms. He is still very masculine, but these womanly ways are growing upon him, and they seem to be due entirely to his associations in business.

Going back to childhood influences, I think we can trace many examples of this nature to disappointed mothers—women who hoped to have a girl, but who reluctantly compromised and kept their boy in curls and dresses and dolls until the masculine tendencies were smothered. A masculine type of woman has been produced by some fathers who almost unconsciously have tried to make masculine companions of their daughters. The case which I have cited of the machine shop girl was an example of this early influence.

Thompson, in his "Mental Traits of Sex" (page 177), says that "the suggestion that the observed psychological differences of sex may be due to differences of environment has often been met with derision, but it seems at least worthy of unbiased consideration. . . . The point to emphasize is that, according to our present light, the psychological differences of sex seem to be largely due, not to difference of average capacity, nor to difference in type of mental activity, but to differences in the SOCIAL INFLUENCES brought to bear upon the developing individual from EARLY INFANCY TO ADULT YEARS."

So we come back to the rowing coach and the college professor and the young man in feminine dramatic roles. There can be little danger when a man or a woman assumes the role of the opposite sex for a season. I think it could easily be demonstrated that such an assumption would work toward the benefit of such students. A man is softened and better rounded by the right conception of the feminine point of view—it will undoubtedly make him a better husband. The same can be said for the college girl. A season of masculine roles will help to make her a better wife. But let us stop the matter right there.

Why Tuberculosis Follows the Flag

BEFORE the British settled the South Sea Islands, before the Americans settled Hawaii, Guam and Samoa, tuberculosis was practically an unknown disease in the tropics. Not a single case was found in any of the tropical islands of the Pacific until white men began their exploitation.

Medical research has now fully established the fact that tuberculosis, which kills the dark-skinned natives of new countries so surely and swiftly, is not transmitted by any extraordinary percentage of the disease among the white settlers. On the contrary the pioneers are usually freer from this ailment than the average in Northern countries.

The disease, once introduced, has always proved swift and deadly to tropical peoples. To find the cause for the tremendous death-rate, one has only to examine the living conditions which follow the wake of civilization.

The native always apes the white man in as far as his power lies. He strips off his palm-leaf girdle, scrapes the cocoanut oil from his shiny skin, and replaces these coverings with the discarded cotton shirts and smocks of the newcomers. In addition he builds a miniature house for himself and goes inside when it rains or when the sun is hot. The white man does these things, and he reasons that what is good for the wonderful white man must be good for himself.

The van of civilization forecasts a general change in native customs. Like the story of the Garden of Eden, is the story of the conquest of the tropics. The wild inhabitants awake to the fact that they are bare and that clothes are the proper thing.

Accustomed for centuries to exposure to the disinfecting rays of the tropical sun, to the coolness of the tropical rains, hardened to all privations, as soon as the native begins to clothe and guard himself he softens his constitution, lowers his resistance, and becomes easy prey to tuberculosis. The mortality registered is often five times that of the same number of patients in less salubrious Northern climates.

All this is merely another example of how difficult and dangerous it is to attempt to contravene nature. Our customary food and clothes are not a matter of a day's invention; our habits are a matter of centuries, not of years.

In order to check the ravages of tuberculosis an attempt is now being made by the British Colonial Office to force the natives back into their old customs of rubbing the body with cocoanut oil and leaving it bare but for a kilt of leaves.

ANY one who has studied and mastered the elementary school figures described in the preceding article will be in a position to take up the Valse and other popular dances. I shall leave the remaining school figures, the Bracket, Rocker and Counter, therefore for a later article.

The Valse will be more effective to raise the standard of proficiency among skaters in general than any other figure, because people otherwise unambitious to acquire proficiency will be aroused enough by seeing the Valse well performed to practise it as an essential to skating.

The credit for the introduction of waltzing on ice has been claimed by various countries. In this connection it may be interesting to note that it originated here in the early sixties, a fact in which we may take no little pride. I have seen it described in an American book published at that time.

There are two styles of valsing on skates. One is the Circular Valse and the other the Serpentine. There is no difference in the steps but the course followed by the skaters is quite different.

In the Circular Valse the couples revolve around large circles, in the form of a single or double eight, which take up nearly the full width of the rink or other skating surface, all making their turns together in time to the music.

In the Serpentine Valse the skaters follow waving lines along each side of the rink, with a wide curve at each end, the skaters advancing to and receding from the centre line and continually reversing their direction of turning as they get onto the different curves. Having only half the width of the rink available for their strokes, these are necessarily curtailed and, as a rule, it is impossible to take more than two consecutive strokes in one direction (except at the ends of the rink), for it is not safe to cross the centre line as the couples on the other side are progressing in the opposite direction, and a collision would be disastrous.

In the Circular Valse on the other hand there is practically no danger from collision, for when two couples do come together the result is harmless, as they they are both travelling in the same direction. Then again in this method there are so-called "safety zones" in which the couples may stand when not skating, when there is no such possibility in the Serpentine style.

For these reasons I am a strong advocate of the Circular Valse, and hope that this method will be pretty generally taken up, in order that we may standardize our dances on the ice. Those who have never followed any particular system of valsing will find the Circular Valse the easier of the two styles, and those who have hitherto followed the Serpentine system will find no difficulty in making the change.

Valsing on skates has nothing in common with the ballroom waltz except the position of the partners, their simultaneous rotation and their execution of the figure to waltz music.

It is a good idea for skaters first to learn what the valse figure is and to practice it persistently alone before trying it with a partner.

The steps of the valse are long, even [illegible] glides of several yards in length, with smooth, circling movements.

In its simplest form the valse step is nothing more than an ordinary forward outside edge on one foot followed by a three-turn to the back inside edge on the same foot and then a passing, with a gliding step, not a drop, to the backward outside edge on the other foot.

This inside backward edge, the tail of the three, is often held for a yard or two before gliding to the outside backward on the other foot.

While tracing this last step, outside backward, the body should be gradually turning to allow the skater to pass straight on to the outside forward on the original foot, when the figure may be repeated.

It is obvious from their relative positions, that when the man is moving on forward curves his partner will be moving on backward ones on opposite but reverse feet; when he is on backward [illegible] he on forward ones, and for her when he is cutting the three-turn she will be passing from her outside forward edge on her other foot, and vice versa.

The three-turn, as described, has been confined to the left foot, and brings about a rotation of the valsers counter-clockwise. To change or reverse this rotation, the figure is done similarly on the right foot, that is to say, the three-turn, which gives the rotation, is now done on the right foot.

Usually two or three turns are done on the left foot, counter-clockwise rotation, to one or two on the right; the reverse when the rotation is changed back to the first, and so on, effecting a general progression of the valsers around the skating area.

The main effect and charm of the valse depend on the manner in which the change of rotation is accomplished. When it is desired to make the change the man, who is usually leading and guiding, instead of cutting another three holds his forward outside edge and then, after having traced thereon a fair sized plain circle rocks over to the forward outside edge on the other foot, preparatory to cutting the three turn before explained. While doing this his partner is tracing the corresponding backward outside edges—of course, on opposite feet.

By most skaters this rotation is effected by means of a sudden jerk or [illegible], the man crossing one foot over the other, in order to obtain the necessary push to force his partner round the other way. Good performers also effect the rotation by crossing the foot, but in such a manner as to disguise the movement as much as possible, by just slipping the foot over the other in a gliding step. One never observes a good lady valser make use of the cross-step backward to change her rotation.

The lady, instead of passing straight from the backward edge on one foot to the same edge on the other foot, should glide over, by a gradual change of edge, from the outside to the inside on the first foot, tracing thereon an inside curve often several yards long before passing from that foot to the outside back on the other. This will enable her partner who at the same time changes from his forward outside to a curve on the inside to skate round her smoothly and easily at the proper angle and their change of rotation will therefore be effected by an easy, even, floating swing of the body, delightful to behold and still more delightful to experience.

For practice in acquiring the valse steps, nothing can be better than doing the figure alone in an eight to a centre, the rotation being changed by the lady on her backward edge and by the gentleman on his forward edge at the centre of the eight.

Except in making the forward three turns, the lady should be on the backward edges, for the reason that as her partner must take the leading or guiding part, he must of necessity be free to look in the direction of motion.

As the movements must be as supple and as smooth as possible, all signs of effort should be concealed, ease and grace being the most essential characteristics of the movement.

Unity of movement may, perhaps, be said to come next in importance to ease and grace; this can only be attained by the motions of the gentleman's arms and legs acting in unity with those of the lady.

The valsing couple should pay special attention to [illegible] suppleness of the tracing [illegible] foot which should never be held stiff or rigid but should be bent [illegible] before and after each turn; it should be slowly straightened at the beginning of every edge to give proper grace and [illegible] effect.

During the change from one foot to the other [illegible] back edges, the lady's tracing foot should make a slight change of edge [illegible] at this point a kind of undulating [illegible] can be given to the figure.

To [illegible] change from inside backward [illegible] backward on the other absolutely imperceptible, one foot should be placed on the ice as near as possible to the other during the execution of the three turns.

It is imperative to skate in perfect rhythm or time to the music, which must be fast enough to enable the valsers to give plenty of action to the dance.

All edges should show similarity of curve; therefore the edges should be nearly equal in length. To skate the valse in eight form, the partners must keep turning smoothly during the change in the centre and carefully avoid the tendency to long straight edges. To avoid irregularity of movement the strike-off must be simultaneous.

The head should be held erect and the body upright but flexible. Each partner should be square and opposite to each other, and there should be no turning of the head to look around before cutting the three-turn. The curve should be skated with firmness and precision and as a general rule held for something like a fourth or a third of a circle both before and after the turn is cut. The pair skating together, the lady taking the man's part and the man the lady's part, is an excellent aid to proficiency.

The mode of starting the valse figure should not be haphazard but with definite movements in concert and in step. Nor should it be brought to an end abruptly. One way is for the man, just before the last bar or two of music, to release his partner's waist, and then going forward on his left and she backward on her right, just with the final notes, swing or float her off on a long, sweeping back spiral.

A further enchantment of the valse is known as the "waves." The simple wave consists in a uniform rise from the start of the forward outside of the valse figure, during the whole curve, up to the three turn. The wavy motion thus resulting is turn, and an equally even drop after the produced by an alternate, gradual straightening up and bending down of the knee and ankle of the tracing leg.

The "back double wave," invented by Miss Harrison, of the Prince's Skating Club, London, and described by Ernest Law in his book, "Valsing on Ice," consists of a first wavelet executed during the change of edge, which effects the rotation—in this instance the lady's left back outside to inside edge—and of a second wavelet executed toward the end of the inside edge.

If after only one three-turn has been cut in either direction by each partner involving one complete revolution of the pair, the rotation is alternated at once, then the long, intermediate changing strokes, whereon the lady travels backward in a single, succeeded by a double wave, will occur so frequently as to occupy exactly half the musical time of the valse, and thereby, in the view of some affording the most delightful way of skating the valse figure.

In the next article, we will endeavor to explain other dances, such as the 10-step, Mohawk, the 14-step, the Jackson Haines Valse, the Rocker Valse, etc.

Women Can Learn to Love but Men Can't

IF a [illegible] love a woman at the time he marries her [illegible] She may keep the best house in town, cook [illegible] and be an ideal wife, but all is lost for her. Man [illegible] taught to love. Woman can. If [illegible] is kind to her and makes her happy [illegible] and like the cat on the [illegible] for a long stay. But man [illegible] from the start that the word about his wife to be a [illegible] husband.

He would rather eat burned toast day after day prepared by a [illegible] from the hands of a wife who [illegible] not fill his heart with [illegible]. Woman, who can be [illegible] the comforts of [illegible], can marry a man, and although [illegible] not be head over heels in love at the time of her [illegible] she will soon find a spark of love growing up in her [illegible].

It a [illegible] realizes that his fiancee does not really love him as [illegible] he need [illegible] all alarmed, for if he intends [illegible] a kind, thoughtful and loving husband he will soon gain all the love he desires. But if a girl is engaged to a man [illegible] her she would take the wisest [illegible] engagement. You can teach man art, music and all the sciences in life; we can make an excellent [illegible] out of him, but we cannot teach him to love a [illegible] because she is good or has some wonderful talent; we cannot make him a good husband or even teach him the art of pretending to be one.

Woman can learn to love as easily as to learn a new stitch in crocheting, or she can pretend to be in love, if the case demands. The little girl starts out in life by pretending she is mother to a great wax doll; she pretends she is rich, is married, a society lady, and is happy in her dreams. But who ever heard of a boy pretending or wanting to be a father and married before his time?"

The little things of life make the woman's world. Man only looks at the big side, the vital question. He asks himself first if he loves the girl and then he goes into details later, the fact whether she is a good housekeeper, a dainty cook and clever at conversation. Woman goes into detail first; she wonders what the man's salary is, what his habits are, his disposition and whether he would make a good husband, and only lastly if she loves him.

The man who tries to pretend he is in love soon shows his cards at the game, and his wife sees his true attitude. But the man's nature is broad and if he loves as he must, right from first sight, he always loves. It does not matter how poor the wife of his choice may make, his love is ever true. Woman often ceases to love the moment her husband does not provide for her and make her hearth a comfortable one. Although we can never teach a man to love a woman, his love, once started, never turns into ice.

Married the "White Slave" Who Testified Against Him

How Young Maury Diggs, Convicted White Slaver, Has Cleverly Cheated the Government's Prosecutor of His Best Witness, Because a Wife Cannot Be Made to Give Evidence Against Her Husband.

Maury I. Diggs.

EVERYBODY knows how the United States Government has tried to put an end to the "White Slave" traffic [illegible] "White Slave Act." By taking [illegible] matter through the Federal Courts and [illegible] machinery it was hoped that much more could be accomplished than has been done by local State and city [illegible].

[illegible] the United States Government [illegible]not prosecute those who violate [illegible] of a city or town or State, it can [illegible] hand in matters which reach beyond the border of one State into another [illegible]. So it is that the Mann "White Slave" law can only reach the white [illegible] who takes his victim from one [illegible] into another.

[illegible] the first and most widely discussed cases under the new Federal law was the prosecution nearly three years ago in a California court of two young men who were rather well known in the West and happened to have quite influential connections.

It was when the United States authorities arrested F. Drew Caminetti and Maury I. Diggs on March 14, 1913, that attention was directed to the new Federal law. The question was whether the courts would hold that the "White Slave" law was really meant to reach individuals who, like Caminetti and Diggs, were not professional white-slavers or was the [illegible] of the law merely to reach professional [illegible] who made their living [illegible] [illegible]able traffic.

Diggs Is Convicted and Appeals for a New Trial.

In the course of the trials of young Diggs and Caminetti the Government succeeded in abundantly proving its case and both young men were convicted under the Federal law which carries a maximum penalty of five years and $5,000 fine.

Of course the two women—the [illegible]—were the chief witnesses the [illegible]ernment relied upon to prove their [illegible].

Caminetti was sentenced to eighteen [illegible]nths in the Federal Penitentiary and [illegible]d $1,500, and Diggs was sentenced to [illegible] years' imprisonment and a fine [illegible] $2,000. Both young men appealed [illegible] the United States Circuit Court of Ap[illegible] for a new trial. Last March the court refused to interfere, affirming the convictions. Then an application was made to the United States Supreme Court for [illegible] which the court [illegible]—and there the case now rests.

[illegible] has [illegible] [illegible] robbed the United States prosecuting officer of [illegible] he had against him who will be sorely needed at the new trial if the Supreme Court grants one. No wife can be made to testify against [illegible].

Indeed, the very thing which has happened in this case was pointed out some months ago as one of the defects of the Mann act, the suggestion being made that the law should be amended so that the 'white slave' in the case could be compelled to testify against the defendant [illegible].

Miss Warrington Is the Star Witness in the Trial.

Diggs was [illegible] before Caminetti. When the case was opened the prosecuting attorney declared that he would prove that:

1. Marsha Warrington, [illegible], and Lola Norris, nineteen, had been [illegible] by Maury I. Diggs, [illegible]-eight, and F. Drew Caminetti, twenty-seven, both married men with children, into leaving Sacramento for fear of scandal and criminal prosecution.

2. Marriage had been promised after the two husbands [illegible] have divorced their wives.

Caminetti raised the money for the trip from Sacramento to Reno, Nev., and Diggs bought the transportation and paid the Pullman fares.

4. That the four traveled as married couples, occupying the same stateroom on a night train.

5. That, on arriving at Reno, on the morning of March 11, 1913, they registered at a hotel as married and occupied adjoining rooms with a bath between.

6. Diggs hired a four-room bungalow, paying rent in advance for a month and representing to the agent that the party was from Los Angeles and intended to spend six months in Reno.

7. That all four lived in the bungalow for three days before they were arrested, Diggs and Marsha Warrington occupying the front room and Caminetti and Lola Norris a rear room.

8. Diggs was in his night clothes when he opened the back door of the bungalow to the officers who arrested him on the morning of the fourteenth, and that the officer waited in the living room while the two girls dressed.

9. After [illegible] Sacramento Diggs had written to Marsha Warrington abjuring her to keep up her courage and that all would end well if she would remember what he had told her, particularly if she was firm in denying that there had been any improper relations between them.

All these important facts were amply established [illegible] their star witness being Miss Warrington herself.

Before [illegible] the young woman [illegible] told how Maury I. Diggs, who was formerly

The Former Miss Marsha Warrington, Who Caused the Conviction of Mr. Diggs—and Now Has Become His Wife

State architect, who had a wife and children living, coerced her into eloping with him to Reno.

Miss Warrington testified that she lived with her father and a stepmother, her own mother having died when she was five years old.

"I have known Maury I. Diggs since last September," she testified, "and we were very close friends. Two weeks before we left for Reno, while Drew Caminetti, Miss Norris and I were riding with Diggs in his machine, he told me that there was a scandal about to be published about the four of us and that we would have to [illegible].

"I was surprised, but he said he would have to go. Miss Norris was told and Caminetti joined [illegible] in urging that we leave [illegible]. They told us that we would be arrested and subjected to the third degree."

The Court Explains the Scope of the Mann Act.

Miss Warrington went on to tell that she and Lola Norris both knew that Diggs and [illegible] were married at the time [illegible] that their relations with their wives were unpleasant, that they were [illegible] wanted to leave town and that they cared more for the girls than they did for their wives.

"I believed him," she declared. "He manifested affection for me, kissed me, discussed marriage with me and said he would get a divorce and marry me. Caminetti told Lola the same thing. I had a strong affection for Diggs. We discussed leaving town together several times when the four of us were on automobile trips and in Diggs's office. We said we couldn't go. I [illegible] away from father, that it would [illegible] him. Diggs said it would all come out in the papers, anyhow, and that my father would know sooner or later and that we had better go.

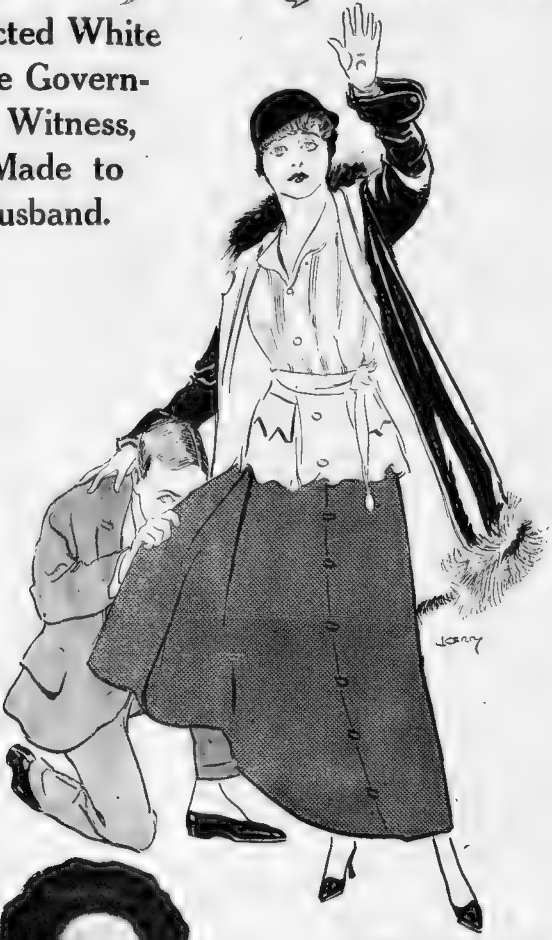
"Finally we consented to go. The men decided on Reno after considering Salt Lake City and Los Angeles. We tried to back out. They told us we couldn't back out.

"That night we met in a cafe. Caminetti went out to get some money. We went to the railroad station. I told Diggs I would stay in Sacramento. He said he cared too much for me, and I would have to go.

"We got into a Pullman car and Diggs engaged a drawing room. He paid the Pullman conductor. I saw him give the railroad conductor the tickets for our trip to Reno. Miss Norris and Caminetti took the upper berth and Diggs and I had the lower."

Miss Warrington then went on to testify that in the bungalow she occupied the front room with Diggs and Miss Norris and Caminetti occupied the rear room, Diggs and Caminetti purchasing the provisions during the three days of their occupancy of the bungalow.

The girl was subjected to a gruelling cross-examination, it being brought out that a month before the elopement the two couples has visited a hotel and Miss Warrington and Diggs had occupied a room together through the night, and on another occasion they had spent the night together in a hotel at San Jose. In connection with testimony of this character the Court ruled that as far as the Mann act was concerned, the previous character or escapades of the girls was entirely immaterial.



Miss Lola Norris, Whose Testimony Caused the Conviction of Mr. Caminetti.

The trial lasted several days, and the jury was out four hours before they agreed upon a verdict of guilty.

When Caminetti was sentenced Judge Van Fleet discussed the wide applicability of the Mann law.

"This was a crime of opportunity," he said. "I mean that the laxity of social conditions and the lack of parental control made it possible. I wish to say that all through the case there is evidence that drink had its paralyzing influence upon the morals and the minds of these men and the young girls with whom they went on that trip to Reno.

"The terribly debasing influence of the saloon and the roadhouse is too disgustingly apparent, and I make the observation here that society must pay the price for permitting the existence of these highly objectionable places.

"This does not help me to exculpate these defendants. I agree with the plea of counsel that the degree of the offense committed by these men (if the Court can be permitted to refer to degrees of this crime where the Mann act falls to) is not as grave as in the cases where men transport women from one State to another for purposes of gain.

"The act did not originally contemplate cases of this character, nor was it the intention of Congressman Mann, as expressed to the Congressional Committee in explaining the original bill, that it should.

"But Congress, in passing the bill added that any transportation for any immoral act where the woman transported was openly exposed to debauchery should be unlawful, and this brought these cases within the purview of the statute. Congress failed to alter the last portion of the act, which gave the statute its common name—the 'White Slave Traffic Act'—and in so failing left the means by which the general misunderstanding and misinterpretation of the law have come about."

If Maury Diggs is granted a new trial by the United States Supreme Court can the Government convict him again now that the "white slave" he led astray can seek the privilege of a wife and refuse to tell the story of her misfortune?

And if this very thing happens, will Congress amend the Mann law so that this door of escape will be closed to future white slavers who may seek to hide behind the protecting skirts of their "white slaves"?

Too Much Meat Makes Husbands and Wives Quarrel?

A[illegible] Dr. [illegible] H. Kress of [illegible] the great cause [illegible]. He claims that the eat[illegible]ods produces a quarrelsome disposition, and that quarrelsome people [illegible] most often get into the [illegible]. There are mineral [illegible] a dis[illegible] [illegible].

[illegible] The Meat [illegible] from [illegible] the people [illegible] mankind. The [illegible] the [illegible] small [illegible] there will be.

Many people are [illegible] Kress [illegible] indigestion and [illegible] not know it, for the simple reason that any [illegible] digestion must take place in the [illegible] only. Because some people are [illegible] at their stomach and never suffer with cramps or acute indigestion they imagine they have good stomachs and could eat leather if necessary. But this is not true, for any one may be suffering from indigestion and still apparently have a quiet, normal stomach.

Although few persons realize it, a cross disposition or an uneven, moody [illegible]tion often indicate[illegible] the stomach [illegible] out of order and being forced to overwork. It is not natural for man to be cross or ugly without just cause and whenever he is he is not well. In nine cases out of ten the cause will be found in disturbances of the stomach.

A man who has over-eaten may arise from his bed the following day apparently well with the exception of that 'cross' feelings which every one has experienced some time during his life. He wants to "pick a quarrel" with some one and if the first person he meets is his wife he will not hesitate to express his feelings and vent his wrath, or, really, his "indigestion," on her. If these [illegible] feelings [illegible] one is very apt to find the way to a divorce court, and perhaps really too much red beef or mutton is really to blame.

Generally speaking, the butcher who, of course, spends his time in his shop and makes meat his principal diet is a cross, surly fellow when we compare him to the grocer, who is usually smiling and kind. The butcher's face is usually flushed and angry-looking, and the good housewife dreads his wrath, while the grocer who lives largely upon butter, eggs and cereals is usually the last man in the world to fear.

Dr. Kress believes that as the buying of meat declines, owing to rising prices, a milder and gentler race will come, and that our divorce courts will cease to be overworked.

New Things Every Woman Ought to Know

What I Recommend for the Beauty's Feet

By Mme. Lina Cavalieri

the Most Famous Living Beauty.

BY the established modern standard, the foot should be neither small nor large, though it is preferable that it be small rather than large. The tiny foot of a large woman is absurd. It suggests deformity. So does the short foot on the tall woman.

The foot should seem to belong to the woman, not to have been loaned to her for the occasion. Like her hand, it should seem to be in perfect harmony with the rest of her body. If the owner be plump, the foot should not be thin. If she be thin, the foot should not be plump.

It should be neither bony nor too fat. The bones should be well covered, but their outline should be plain enough to give a certain distinction called "character" to the foot. The toes should spread comfortably apart, yet there should not be unseemly spaces between them. The spaces should be slight and even, like those between regular and well-kept teeth.

The skin should be smooth and pinky white. The nails should be strong but smooth and semi-transparent and delicately pink. Above all, there should be no blemish, no disfiguring corn on the small toes, no enlargement of the joints nor bunions, no calloused spot upon the sole. The high-bred foot lies, according to existing standards, not flat upon the ground, but rests upon the heel and front part of the sole, so that a rill of water may easily run under it. To correspond with this natural bridge, there must also be an arched instep.

Now how to achieve such a foot. First, wear shoes that are large enough, and let them be of soft, pliable leather. Large enough, I said, but not too large. The foot that slips about in large shoes is as likely to get callous disfigurements as the one that is pinched. Heavy leather and thick soles have no place on a woman's delicate feet. The leather should be close, but fine, the soles of medium thickness.

"Use a Ring Plaster to Protect a Bunion from Further Irritation."

I cannot lay too much emphasis upon the need of a straight, even heel on the shoe. The heel is to the shoe what the cornerstone is to the house. It is quite as necessary that it be well laid, straight and secure.

The run-down heel disturbs the adjustment of the internal organs. It pushes some of them close upon each other, draws others away from their natural support. It destroys the balance of the foot, causing blisters and callous spots. It throws the weight where it should not be, doing violence to the centre of gravity.

Watch your heels as closely as you should the running time of your watch. When the bottoms of the heels disclose an inclined plane at the back of the sides, you will find a corresponding blister or newly formed callous spot on the sole. Your ounce of prevention lies in sending the shoes to a cobbler the moment you see the hint of crookedness in the heels.

The feet, like that other extreme of the body, the hair, need sunlight. Think how little the poor, imprisoned feet get. They need air. How little of that they get.

To be healthy, the feet must be kept scrupulously clean. So much are they exposed to the dust of the streets, especially by those who wear low shoes, that they need more than the perfunctory share of the morning plunge or shower. They should be bathed every night in a foot-tub containing warm water. If the feet be tender, the water should contain borax in the proportion of an ounce to a gallon.

Warm salt water is also very easeful for tired feet, especially useful for reducing the congestion in swollen feet. This powder, sprinkled into the warm bathwater, affords great relief—use one teaspoonful to a gallon of water:

Borax (powdered), 1 oz.
Sea salt, 1 oz.
Alum, ½ oz.

For tired, swollen feet, lemon juice, sprinkled freely into the water, is a means of alleviation. An easier way to apply it is to cut a lemon in half and rub the soles of the feet with it.

Calloused spots may be removed from the sole by planing off the rough surfaces with pumice stone.

English women give ease to their feet after a long walk by bathing them in an infusion of rosemary leaves. Steep the rosemary leaves a half ounce to a gallon of water. When cool, bathe the feet for twenty minutes in the mixture, adding warm water now and then, as the water in the foot-tub cools.

For feet inclining to excessive perspiration, a powder made of these ingredients should be used in the footbath:

Tannin, 60 grains.
Alum, 2 drams.
Lycopodium, 6 drams.

A teaspoonful of the powder mixed in a gallon of warm water is sufficient.

Sensitive feet are much relieved by this remedy, which is popular in England.

How to Train Your Children to Save Money

By JOSEPHINE STORY

BEGIN to train your child in the use of money as soon as he or she is old enough to realize that a penny or a shiney [illegible] is legal tender for [illegible] and ice cream cones, etc.

Give him a weekly allowance [illegible] teach him to spend it, how to save a certain proportion for [illegible] the purchase of which requires dollars, not cents.

Encourage him to have a savings bank deposit in his own name into which he can put the savings from his allowance and from what he earns. Have him understand that he may draw from it at will—he won't do it very often.

Train your child in the use of money as you would teach him his alphabet, gradually increasing his responsibility [illegible] [illegible] a boy of [illegible] a [illegible] Read [illegible] if you had never taught him what the letters mean? YOU HAVE A BEAUTIFUL FACE

But Your Nose?

In this day and age attention to your appearance is an absolute necessity if you expect to make the most out of life. Not only should you wish to appear as attractive as possible, for your own self-satisfaction, which is well worth your efforts, but you will find the world in general judging you greatly, if not wholly, by your "looks"; therefore it pays to "look your best" at all times. PERMIT NO ONE TO SEE YOU LOOKING OTHERWISE; it will injure your welfare! Upon the impression you constantly make rests the failure or success of your life. Which is to be your ultimate destiny? My new nose-shaper "Trados" (Model 22) corrects now ill-shaped noses without operation, quickly, safely and permanently. Is pleasant and does not interfere with one's daily occupation. Write today for free booklet, which tells you how to correct ill-shaped noses without cost if not satisfactory. M. TRILETY, Face Specialist, 83 Ackerman Building, Binghamton, N. Y.

To my Sweetheart.

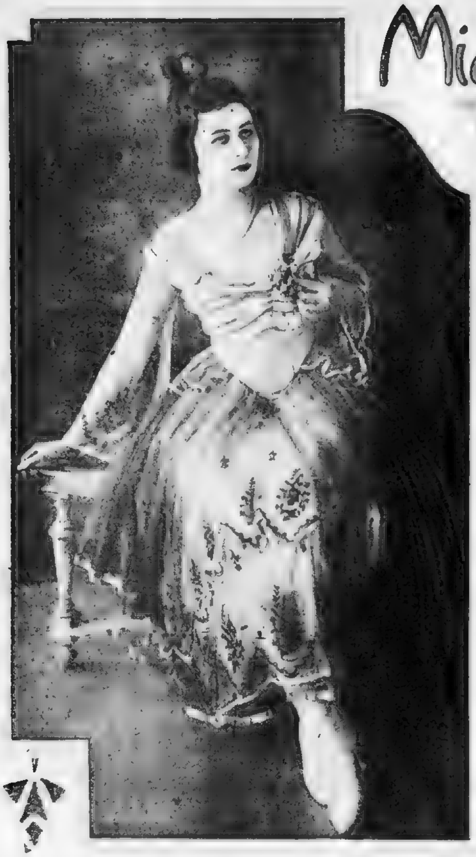
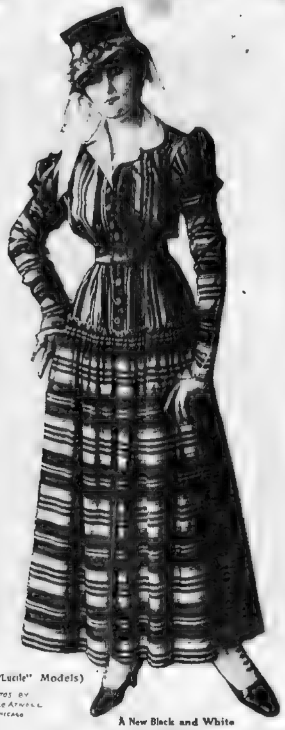
Mid-Winter Dresses



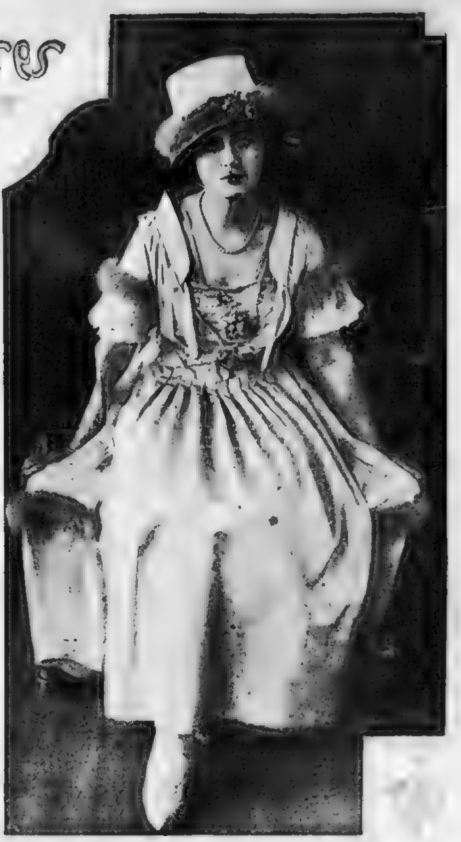
Dress of Shaded Gray Tulle Over Jet



("Lucile" Models)

Photos by Burke Atwell Chicago

A New Black and White Striped Taffeta



Gown of Pale ... Corded Silk Trimmed with Blue Fox

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London and foremost creator of fashions in the world writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

Lady Duff-Gordon's Paris establishment brings her into close touch with that centre of fashion.

Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishments are at Nos. 37 and 39 West Fifty-seventh street, New York, and No. 1400 Lake Shore Drive, Chicago.

By Lady Duff-Gordon

("LUCILE")

THE little dress to the left is called "Her Last Bouquet." Why? I just don't know. It looks that way. It is of shaded gray tulle over a black jet embroidered underskirt with a bodice of pale gray satin, with jet embroidered sleeves. The shoulders have a dainty, old fashioned [illegible].

Notice, if you please, the hair. The little arrangement at the top is not artificial. It is entirely a braid of the model's own hair twisted into an attractive ornament. I have written before of the ornamental uses to which one can put hair. This is one of them.

Over on the right is "Milachka." This dress is of blue faille—a corded silk. The collar is loose lace. The dress is trimmed with blue fox of a curious shade, and little hand made flowers finish the ornamentation. The hat—a "topper"—is pale blue satin, trimmed also with the same fox fur and flowers.

In the centre is one of the striped taffetas—black and white. This also boasts a "topper."

The three gowns are very representative of my mid-Winter modes.

In looking over the mid-Winter models from Paris color, too, to my mind, seems absent, compared to what one usually meets in these garments. They, of course, have for the moment some excuse for any lack of gayety that one misses in the outfits sent over from the once gay city. Still, bearing in mind that America is in no way hampered by the terrible conflict now in progress on the other side, one might have thought that they would have sent something more lively than the grays, blues, blacks and whites.

The coats were astonishing, some being adapted from North African garments, others Russian, and one Spanish garment in particular attracted my attention.

The [illegible] and short skirts demand particular attention for the feet and also the ankles should be covered. For the purpose of afternoon dances, when the style of the outer coat is suitable, the Russian boots that I spoke of some time ago are common, because these are easily slipped off and replaced by a tiny pair of satin sandals that are easily carried in the muff. Gaiters in no way replace these, as they must be removed to dance, and the trouble of buttoning and unbuttoning is too much to make it worth while.

For myself I almost always wear shoes made of the same material as the dress, the stockings either to match or flesh. Black and white partly colored shoes have become too common to be any more chic. A well cut shoe, however, is extremely smart always in black or white.

With an all black costume one can wear different colored shoes, stockings and gloves. I have seen a French woman in black and scarlet slippers. These were attractive, but only to be worn by a person who is sufficiently chic and well aware of her chicness to be unconscious that she is wearing something a little bit more striking than the ordinary woman would dare.

VICTOR J. EVANS & CO.

LARGEST PATENT AGENCY IN THE WORLD

THE largest Patent Agency in the world is the firm of Victor J. Evans & Co., [illegible] of Washington, D. C., with branch offices in New York city at Nos. 189-191 Broadway, in Philadelphia at No. 1429 Chestnut street, and in Pittsburgh, at No. 514 Empire Building. The growth of this firm has reached such proportions as to necessitate the erection of a special building, the Victor Building, Nos. [illegible] 724 Ninth St., N. W., Washington, D. C., opposite the United States Patent Office. This is the [illegible] and most perfectly equipped office building in the country devoted exclusively to the patent business.

Specialization

The field of invention is so vast that it is impossible for any one man to become an expert in all the different classes of invention. Only those persons skilled in the class to which an invention relates are capable of rendering efficient service. For this reason this firm employs twenty-four patent lawyers and mechanical experts who are selected for their special knowledge [illegible] in a certain line of invention.

In employing these staff [illegible] experts and specialists who devote their time to one or two inventions, Messrs. Victor J. Evans & [illegible] are but following the practice of the Patent Office who, realizing the impossibility of any one man having a general knowledge sufficient to handle all classes of cases, have divided the Patent Office into forty-two divisions, each handling several classes of inventions, and it is through this system of specialists and experts forming the technical corps of their offices that this firm is enabled to secure

VICTOR J. EVANS

Patents that Protect and Pay

Any one will appreciate the advantages of this corps of experts over other attorneys, where one man has to handle all classes of patents submitted. This firm is enabled to direct a particular invention from the time it is submitted until the patent is secured, in the hands of experts in the class to which the invention relates, thus securing the best possible services. This firm has also helped a number of inventors who were in need of financial aid to obtain patents. This was accomplished by means of their Certificate of Patentability, which furnished the necessary proof of patentability and thus enabled their clients to interest partners or secure financial assistance to protect their ideas.

Assist Their Clients to Sell Their Inventions

Victor J. Evans & Company also assist their clients to sell their inventions by [illegible] the inventor with capital. They are constantly in receipt of requests from manufacturers, promoters, mail order houses and others who are in the market for patents secured by them. They give their clients a list of Patent Buyers containing names and addresses of the persons desiring to purchase patents. This firm also advertises their clients' inventions free in Manufacturing Journals and also distribute free of charge four books on patents which are the finest publications ever issued for free distribution. "HOW TO OBTAIN A PATENT" contains one hundred mechanical movements illustrated. "WHAT TO INVENT" contains a valuable list of inventions wanted, also information concerning prizes offered for inventions amounting to $1,000,000. "PATENTS THAT PAY" contains letters from clients for whom they have secured profitable patents. "FOREIGN PATENTS" contains full information regarding patents in foreign countries. Persons interested in patents should write for these books, which will be sent upon request, free, without charge or obligation, by filling out the attached coupon.

COME TO THE "MOVIES" At My House—Tonight

You Can Make Money and Have Barrels of Fun

Read these Letters from Happy Boys

Thanks a Thousand Times

I received the Machine a month ago and I am very pleased with it. It is a beauty in every way. I thank you a thousand times for it. I am proud to own it and I have had so much fun with it that I could not write to you before to tell you that I received it. John Crymes, 524 Ave. C., Bayonne, N. J.

Fifty Friends Saw It

I received your Motion Picture Machine last Monday and that night I showed it. I had about fifty friends. They could not all fit in my theater. I am very proud of my Machine, it is a dandy, and my friends say they wish they could have one too. Alex Mentler, 2666 Lisbon Rd., Cleveland, Ohio.

Been Offered $40.00

I do not suppose you remember me, but I am one of the boys who received a Motion Picture Machine some time ago, and will say it is the finest Motion Picture Machine I ever saw for a premium. It shows a beautiful picture on the screen. Well, many thanks to you and I wish that every boy in the United States could own one. I have been offered $40.00 for it, and could have got more for it. Walter Jones, Yellow Pine, Ala.

20th Century Entertainer

I received my Motion Picture Machine and thank you. I worked it the same day I got it, and it worked fine. I find it a Twentieth Century Entertainer, and I don't think any home is complete without one of your Motion Picture Machines. Henry Thurman, 317 S Johnson St., New Orleans, La.

Gives Shows Regularly

I find my Motion Picture Machine a fine one. I am satisfied with it in every way. No Machine can come up to it. I give shows regularly and everybody is satisfied with its fine work. W. A. Mulford, Bryn Mawr, Pa.

Sold 300 Tickets

I am very thankful for that wonderful Machine and I think it is the best I have ever seen. I am going to have an entertainment to-day and therefore I have not much time to write letters. I think I will make about $10.00. I have sold 300 tickets already. Joseph Rauch, 2411 W. Broadway, St. Louis, Mo.

Made $15.00 With It

I thought I would write you a few lines to let you know I received my Motion Picture Machine, and it is a beauty. I never saw a better Machine than this. The first day I got the Machine, I started off and made $15.00 with it. Master J. Hughes, 908 Hamilton, Duquesne, Pa.

Made $2.00 in One Night

With all pleasure I write to tell you that I received my Motion Picture Machine about six months ago, and I made $2.00 in one night, and hope that my friend Jerry Leigh's will be as good as mine. And I lost my list, so please send me another one. Paul G. Taylor, 5 Pratt St., Newnan, Ga.

More Than Expected

I am very well pleased with the Motion Picture Machine which I received in good condition, as it is more than what I expected. I thank you very much for it and it is the first time I ever tried such a thing. Ben W. Jenson, R. R. 2, Des Moines, Iowa.

BIG CLEAR MOTION PICTURES

A Box of Film With Your Machine

Make Money. Description of this New Model Motion Picture Machine. This Machine is made of Russian Metal, black Japan, eight-wheel mechanism which drives the Motion Pictures; excelsior diaphragm lens, triple polished; standard double extra reflector, throwing ray of light many feet, enlarging the picture up to three or four feet in diameter; lamp is fitted with a great safety carbide generator, and produces the highest light power. Has far greater light power than the ordinary electric light, producing 500 candle-power on the screen and bringing out every detail of the picture with pronounced distinctness. A child can learn in five minutes how to run this really wonderful Machine.

This Motion Picture Machine which I want to send you FREE, gives clear and life-like Motion Pictures as are shown at any regular Motion Picture show. It flashes motion pictures on the sheet before you. This Machine and Box of Film are FREE—absolutely free to every boy in this land who wants to write for an outfit, free to girls and free to older people. Read MY OFFER below which shows you how to get this Marvelous Machine.

The Films are taken one after another, about 1-100 of a second apart, as the object is passing, and thus its every action is brought out clearly in the picture. They are exact reproductions of the films used by the standard machines in all the large Motion Picture Theaters. I will ship you a fine Machine all complete and ready to give a Motion Picture Show the minute you receive it. REMEMBER, THERE WILL BE NO DELAY.

A Real Motion Picture Show

in your own home. Remember, this is a genuine Motion Picture Machine and the motion pictures are clear, sharp and distinct.

The Motion Picture Machine is finely constructed and carefully put together by skilled workmen. It is made of Russian Metal, and is operated by a finely constructed mechanism, has a beautiful finish. The projecting lenses are carefully ground and adjusted, triple polished, standard double extra reflector, throwing a ray of light many feet. The light is produced by a safety carbide generator, such as is used on the largest automobiles. This throws a dazzling white light of 500 candle-power on the screen.

It is not a toy, it is a solidly constructed and durable Motion Picture Machine. The mechanism is exceedingly simple and is readily operated by the most inexperienced. The pictures shown by this marvelous Motion Picture Machine are not the common, crude and lifeless Magic Lantern variety, but are life-like photographic reproductions of actual scenes, places, and people, which never tire its audiences. This Motion Picture Machine has caused a rousing enthusiasm wherever it is used.

How You Can Get This Great Motion Picture Machine—Read

My Wonderful Offer to You. HERE IS what you are to do in order to get this amazing Motion Picture Machine and the real Motion Pictures. Send your name and address—that is all.
